THE WYMAN MOVEMENT.

The prohibitionists have made a bold flank movement on the Republican ranks. For a number of years they have been struggling pluckily and desperately to get the control of municipal politics in the balance of power. But now they are making a deeper and more comprehensive movement. Jas. T. Wyman is the prohibitionist choice for mayor, and at their instance a petition has been widely circulated and extensively signed, praying him to accept the nomination upon a so-called people's ticket. Last night it was announced that Mr. Wyman had accepted the proffered nomination and will be a candidate for the position, without fear and with a determination to win, until the close of the polls on election day. Geo. A. Pillsbury does not accept the nomination. He is a Republican and his convention to-morrow in the face of Wyman, opposition, and the Republican ranks is just now sadly demoralized. The bosses of the party were especially active last night, and the probable result will be that a broad new scheme will be developed as a new party case, and the desperate measures will not be adopted to meet the exigencies. Thursday will be a notable day in that it will be the occasion of holding probably the most exciting convention ever known in this city, and that wave of excitement will not subside until after election day.

How still the political tricksters are respecting the election of park commissioners. But despite the lack of outward show, and despite the simulated nonpartisanism, there is a latent movement on the part of the Republican bosses to capture the majority, at least of the board, and possibly the whole.

The Republican papers have now let the bars down so that Geo. A. Pillsbury can step out of the field, leaving J. T. Wyman the victorious hero in the convention of the morning. They are evidently of the opinion that Pillsbury cannot get elected.

It is impossible to exclude the motor line from our municipal politics. Controlled as it is by outside forces, it must be controlled by any body which may be controlled by deliberate and proper means composed of politicians.

Another candidate for comptroller forges ahead for Republican recognition, in the person of W. W. Waterman. He is expected to have a competitor in the convention on Thursday.

Dr. Hutchins, of the Plymouth church, is another example of the priest who has perverted his office by preaching politics from his pulpit.

One of the female inmates of an out-of-town bawdy house was arrested for drunkenness on Monday night. Mad as a hatter, she was taken to the police station by her surroundings, and missed no occasion to vent her spleen on the members of the force.

The suit of the non-resident lumbermen, which was argued before the United States court in Madison, Wis., on Saturday, the 23rd day of February, has been dismissed on the ground of jurisdiction. It fell to the recorder that the suit was brought by the lumbermen to permanently enjoin the Wisconsin authorities from collecting duties on certain lumber. The case was not decided on its merits, but was simply dismissed for want of jurisdiction. As a matter of course, the case is not yet. The lumbermen may possibly bring a new suit under protest, but undoubtedly the battle will have to be fought once again in the state courts.

A large and enthusiastic audience assembled at Music hall Monday evening, for the purpose of commemorating the life and services of Robert Emmet. The event was introduced by Chairman McCarthy in a few well chosen and appropriate words. Alderman John T. Burke and George W. Smith, who presided over the occasion, were admirably followed by short and spirited addresses. The proceedings were pleasantly diversified by the singing of patriotic songs, which were well rendered by the choir. Towards the close of the meeting, the chairman called on the Rev. James O'Reilly, who spoke for a short time with his usual power. He was followed by the Rev. Father, who was at the further end of the hall, was politely requested to step forward. On complying, the chairman in a few appropriate remarks, presented the Rev. Father to the assembly. He then introduced an elegant gold watch on behalf of the Catholics of Stillwater. Recovering somewhat from his surprise the recipient thanked the donors in a few appropriate words. Taken all in all, the affair was most well-timed, and carried out in a very satisfactory manner.

AFTERWARD.

There is no vacant chair. The loving meet— A group unbroken—smitten. Who knows how? One sitteth silent only, in his usual seat. Weeping him once that freedom. Why not now?

Perhaps he is too weary, and needs rest; He needed it too often, nor could we Bestow. God gave it, knowing how to do so best. Which of us would disturb him? Let him be.

There is no vacant chair. If he will take The mood to listen mutely, he will do. By his least mood we crossed, for which the Plead not nor question! Let him have his one.

Death is a mood of life. It is no whim. By which life's giver mocks a broken heart. Death is life's reliance. Still audible to him. The flushed voice, happy, speaketh on, apart.

There is no vacant chair. To love is still To have. No vacant to memory than to eye. And desire yet to look upon him will. We hold him by our love, that shall not die.

For while it doth not then it cannot. Try! Old ways of being noble all with him laid by. Because we love he is. Then trust awhile. ELIZABETH STUART FULLER.

QUEEN VIC'S BOOK.

A Few Extracts from the Book About Brown.

A truer, nobler, trustier heart, More loyal and more loving never Best within a human breast.

Copies of the Queen's book have now been received in this country. The book itself shows that its character and contents had been very fairly set forth in the comments sent from London by cable. It is almost entirely devoted to descriptions of little incidents in the Queen's daily routine of life, and to Brown. Primrose is given to the upsetting of her carriage by a careless driver, on the road from Altnagathuch.

It was quite dark when we left, but all the lamps were lit as usual; for the first, however, Smith, who was driving, seemed to be quite nervous. Suddenly, about two miles from Altnagathuch, and about twenty minutes after he had started, the carriage began to turn upon one side; we called out: "What's the matter?" There was a pause, during which Alice said: "We are upsetting."

"Another moment—during which I had time to reflect whether we should be killed or not, and though there were still things I had not settled and wanted to do—the carriage turned over on its side and we were all precipitated to the ground. I came down with my face to the ground, near the carriage, the horses both on the ground, and Brown calling out in despair: "The Lord Almighty have mercy on us! Who did ever see the like of this before? I thought you were all killed."

The Queen's face was a good deal bruised and swollen and her right thumb was excessively painful and much swollen. Smith was sent back for assistance, Brown in the meanwhile being "indefatigable in his attention and care." Almost directly after the incident occurred, the Queen was able to make her way to the stable to be able to tell to my dearest Albert," to which the princess answered: "But he knows it all, and I am sure he watched over us."

"It was not cold," the queen says, "and I remembered from the first that my beloved Albert was in my mind, to make me the best of what could not be altered." However, except for Smith, the accident had no serious consequences. "People were foolishly alarmed when we got upstairs, and made a great fuss. I took only a little soup and fish in my room and had my head bandaged."

In August, 1867, the queen visited Floors and the Scotch border country. Kelso is described as being very picturesque. Here she was the guest of the Duke of Buccleuch, whose house is admired greatly.

The distant Cheviots range, with a great deal of wood, Kelso, embossed in rich woods, with the bridge and the Tweed flowing beneath natural grass terraces which go down to it. Very fine. It reminds me a little of the scenery of the Highlands, and I think the best of what could not be altered."

On the 12th of September, 1877, the queen left Balmoral for an expedition to Loch Maree, which proved most delightful. Here are one or two passages, which show how the time was spent:

Reading: "I remember, Beatrice's room is a very pretty one, but very hot, being over the kitchen. Brown's, just opposite, also has a bed and not hot, but smaller. After dinner the Duchess of Roxburgh read a little out of the newspapers.

The bridges are beautiful and you cannot sit quietly without being struck by them. In about twenty minutes to 1. I remained sketching the lovely views from the windows in the dining room and then sketched the beautiful mountain also.

Even here, although the children were called to the dining room, I did not leave my sofa room for a long time. I saw no room for my darling and felt I was indeed alone and a widow overcame me very sadly! It was the first time I had gone in this way on a visit (like in former times) and I thought so much of all dearest Albert. To-day I sat at the dining table, and I looked at everything—and now! Oh! must it ever, be so!

During this visit the queen made an expedition to Melrose: "most picturesque and surrounded by woods and hills."

We drove straight up to the abbey. * * * and walked about the ruins, which are, indeed, very fine, and some of the architecture and carving in beautiful preservation. Most truly does Walter Scott say:

If thou wouldst visit fair Melrose aight Go visit it by the pale moonlight.

It looks very ghostlike, and reminds me a little of the castle of London. Another twenty minutes or half hour brought us to Abbotsford, the well known residence of Sir Walter Scott. It lies low and looks rather gloomy. * * * They showed us the part of the house in which Sir Walter lived and all his rooms—his drawing room, and the same furniture as he used in the room where he saw his MS. of "Ivanhoe" and several others of his novels and poems in a beautiful handwriting, with hardly any erasures, and other relics which Sir Walter had himself collected. Then his study, a small room, with a bookcase, and a desk, in which he used to write, and a desk taken from a chest taken after death of Sir Walter. In his study we saw his journal, in which Mr. Hope Scott asked me to write my name (which I felt it a presumption in me to do), as also the others. We went through some passages into two or three rooms where were collected fine specimens of old armor, etc., and where in a glass case are Sir Walter's last clothes. We ended by going into the dining-room, in which Sir Walter Scott died, where we took tea.

In September, 1869, the queen visited Inverloch, and the entry in the journal for the 1st is as follows: "Got up at 7:30, breakfast at 8, and at 8:30 left Balmoral with Louise, Beatrice, and Jane Churchill (Brown is always, unless I mention to the contrary, on the box) for Balmoral."

We quote the following passage, one of the many in which the queen describes the beautiful scenery of the district:

Hardly a creature did we meet, and we passed merely before gentlemen's places, of very few cottages, with simple women and befouled, long-haired lassies and children, quiet and unassuming old men and laborers. This solitude, the romance and wild loveliness of everything here, the absence of any vulgar beginnings, the independent simple people who all speak their own language, beloved Scotland the proudest, finest country in the world. There is that beautiful heather, which you do not see elsewhere. I prefer greatly to Switzerland, magnificence and glorious as the scenery of that country is.

On Wednesday, Sept. 8 she writes: "A very bad night from a violent attack of neuralgia in my leg. I only got up after 9 and could hardly walk or stand, but was otherwise well. I took a little, but very little, breakfast alone. I remained at home reading, working with a blue net, in which I had a DEXTER, the World's Healer, Washington, D. C."

The Queen was greatly impressed by the communion service as it is celebrated in the Scotch Kirk, and in an entry in the journal for Nov. 13, 1871, says:

It was all so truly earnest, and no description can do justice to the perfect devotion of the whole assemblage. It was much touching, and I longed much to join in it. (Since we have been in a foot note, I have registered a prayer of the communion at
