Some of the Huron delegation were represented by proxy and these process made a hard fight against the unit rule put without success. The delegates from the north part of the county friends took a trip down the river to Fort fought Huron until about half of the Yates, where 100 braves and 200 squaws ticket was nominated when the convention adjourned for supper. It had become apparent to all the opposition that their case was a a hopeless one, and they made the evening session a perfect farce. As soon as a nomination was made the chairman of the Altoona delegation would rise and state that if the gentleman nominated was from Huron, that he would, in behalf of the people of the north end of the county, heartily second the nomination. Postmaster Cain, (one of the editors of the Huron Times,) arraigned the gentleman from Alt ona for seeking to turn the convention into a farce, and tried to show that when a man was elected to an office that he was obliged to come to the county seat to live, and that it was a recognized party rule to reward one faithful term

As Mr. Cain was one of the members of the Huron delegation to the convention that nominated Gifford, and there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction expressed in reference to the action of that delegation while Piere. It is believed that Huron hus"sown the wind and will reap the cyclone" in two years Dr. Robertson, the popular stnmp speaker, from the present time.

The Huron Leader of this week has a half column article which is headed as follows: "A high handed outrage by Postmaster to hold a Republican meeting in Huron."

The article alleges that Mr. Mellette, chairman of the territorial committee, notified Mr. Cain, who is the chairman of the Beadle county committee, that Thomas Sterling, of Northville, had been appointed to speak in ences me is that the mail for the north closes Huron on October 20, and requested him to in a few minut give notice of the meeting, etc. When Mr. forced to close. Sterling arrived in Huron he found that no preparations had been made for the meeting. He called on Mr. C. and asked if he had re ceived Mr. Mellette's notification. Mr. Cain said that he had, and that he supposed he (Sterling), was coming here to speak for the regular Republican legislative ticket nominated at Redfield, and that he (Cain), would do nothing that would help that movement. The speakers soon seperated. Mr. Sterling went to bis hotel and cancelled nine engagements to speak west of Huron.

As to the truth of the above, we are not prepared to state. We give it simply as it appears in the Leader, but if it is a fact it is certainly an unwarranted act on the part of Mr. Cain, and deserves just censure on the part of all. We, as Democrats, would have We, as Democrats, would have to give a formal notice of a Democratic speaker under similar circumstances, and feel loth to believe that he could have served his own party thus, even if they were an opposing faction.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

A Minnesota Muddle-The Interesting Par-

[Milwaukee Sunday Telegraph, 19th.] Rather an odd complication has arisen in the national guard of a sister state. It seems that while in camp last summer the colonel of the 1st regiment received notification that the governor would review his command on a certain day. The hour fixed was 7:30 p. m., and the adjutant general from his office in St. Paul sent a letter to the colonel saying briefly that the time must be changed and without the customary "by order of the commander-in-chief." signed it simply as adjutant general. The colonel received the letter but did not order a change of programme and the adjutant general, finding that his first missive was ineffectual, took an ordinary business card and wrote on the back of it a mandate somewhat as follows: "Colonel W. B. Bend, the review must come off at 5 p. m., or not at all.

C. M. MCCARTHY.

Adjutant General. This card was handed the colonel, who tore it up in the preernce of his officers, and declared it to be an impertinence. The adjutant general preferred charges. The governor announced that it was impracticable to convene a court martial to try Colonei Bend, but as a substitute he prepared a gubernatorial review of the case and administered a long reprimand to the offending colonel which be directs to be read to the entire National Guard of the state. The governer sustains the action of his chief of staff and holds that the line officer was entirely in the wrong.

Now it is, perhaps, a matter too delicate to the interests of the entire National Guard at heart the Sunday Telegraph feels constrained to point out some singular features in this fend the action of Colonel Bend, who should have set a better example of cheerful compliance with the expressed wishes of his commander-in-chief, it must express its entire disapprobation of the methods, or lack of methods displayed by Minnesota's adjutant general.

Chief of staff and the senior officer in rank in the state forces, the adjutant general, has of himself, no authority whatsoever to issue orders to the line officers. He is the mouthpiece of the governor and his orders can only have weight when his signature follows the all-powerful "by order of the command-er-in-chief, and for him to send as he did in this case two orders to Colonel Bend, omitting this formula entirely, and virtually asserting himself as the commanding officer. was a military impropriety of the first order. If any man should be an example of the proprieties, courtesies and etiquette of military life, the adjutant general is the man. ch pter of this controversy is anything but The governor holds that in sending his first order the adjutant general paid the colonel the delicate compliment of expressing as a wish what he could have ordered as a right, and that the mere omission of the order "by order of, etc.," so transformed the communication from the imperative into the courteous that the colonel ought to nave been tickled-not affronted-This is ingenious but lacks military sense. If this were sound reasoning the colonel should have been overwhelmed with gratification on receiving a curt pencilled note scrawled on the back somebody's business card telling him that he must change his programme at once or the play should not come off. "If the colonel oubted the genuineness of the signature, says the governor, "he could have satisfied himself by questioning the orderly who brought the note." This too strikes us as the converse of military method. It might be confirmation strong as holy writ to some colonels to be assure d by a private soldier or a strange messenger that the adjutant general really wrote that himself, but in the regular service no colonel could be induced to believe that the adjutan't general would send him such a thing, or so far forget himself, if the orderly were to swear to it on a stack of bibles. There is something singu lar and pitifully weak about this part of the governor's argument. In fact it looks very much as though the adjutant general bound to put him through at any cost.

It semetimes happens that the adjutant generalcy is conferred as a reward for political service rendered and that an obscure and uneducated man leaps at once into a position of prominence over old and tried soldiers. We do notmean to say that such is the case here because we have no information on the subject, but had a court martial been practicable we doubt whether a dozen line or staff-officers would have been found fo take the same views entered by the governor in sustaining General McCarthy throughout and, as he deemed a court unpracticable, we doubt still more the wisdom or justice of the governor's assumption of court martial function in trying and sent-encing Colonel Bend and then punishing him by the publication of a reprimand to be read to every command in the state. This is an humiliation to a deserving, though probably erring officer, and a triumph to an adjutaht general whose conduct of military affairs is so far from faultless as to descrye

> Bill Tweed in Washington [From Perley's Reminiscences.]

Another noted person who visited Wash ington early in the administration of Mr. Fillmore was William M. Tweed, of New York, who came as foreman of the American Engine Company No. 6, which was composed of young volunteer firemen. Visiting the White House, the company was ushered into the East Room, where President Fillmore soon appeared, and Tweed, stepping out in front of his command, said: "These are Big Six's boys, Mr. President." . He then walked along the line with Mr. Fillmore and introduced each member individually. As they were leaving the room a newspaper reporter asked Tweed why he had not made a longer speech. "There was no necessity," replied New York, 'for the company is as much grander than any other fire company in this New York, "Some Think the company in this present a support of the single property of the single prop world as Niagara Falls is grander than Croton dam." dam." Two years afterwards Tweed, profit-ing by a division in the Whig ranks in the Fifth District of New York, returned to Washington as a representative in congress. He was a regular attendant, never participa-ting in the debates, and always voting with the Democrats. Twice he read speeches which were written for him, and he obtained for a relative the contract for supplying the House with chairs for summer use, which were worthless and soon disappeared.
