

A LIGHT GRIST.

Judge Burr Disposes of the Bums in Double Quick Time.

There are an infinite number of ways of making an honest and disinterested penny in this troubled world, but the racket invented by James Watson pretty nearly lays over the deck. James is a quite unique in his way and if he would only direct his talents into honorable channels he might have money to lend at 10 per cent. But he is a depraved wretch with a bad heart and he takes to sinning as easily as a goblin takes to water. His act is the dead and dumb racket; he tells to be as deaf as a lamp post, and with his stock in trade he manages to work on the sympathy of mankind so as to induce them to part with their shekels. After he had played the racket Friday night he took his ill-gotten gains, marched into a saloon and boldly called for a schooner of beer. Officer Johnson had spotted him for his meek and just as he was about to guzzle the nectar he was grabbed. He was charged with vagrancy yesterday and he went to the bastille for thirty days.

James Flemming, another queer duck, was also charged with vagrancy. He was picked up at 1 a. m., and being unable to give an account of himself he was given the grand slam. He will also be in the bastille for thirty days. John Thompson wore a black eye, a Father Hubbard ulster of the vintage of '83 and a ghastly smile that would have made the fortune of Hamlet. He sticks to when he is not budging and he times when he is a clever fellow. He can lead in the course of which Van called his old college friend a liar. Mr. Solomon forgot the proverb of his wife's namesake and smote Van on the bugle. The names of both men were up, but Van restrained himself and had not arrested for Friday and leading in his roll he so far forgot himself as to tackle a stranger for a drink. Then he was run in, and the little pensive cot him ten bills.

Geo. Solomon and Van Hanen had a little bit of a row in the course of which Van called his old college friend a liar. Mr. Solomon forgot the proverb of his wife's namesake and smote Van on the bugle. The names of both men were up, but Van restrained himself and had not arrested for Friday and leading in his roll he so far forgot himself as to tackle a stranger for a drink. A Lady Gives Her Views on the Street Car Question.

The street car question has, during the past year, been discussed pro and con, it would seem that the subject has been exhausted; but there is a stand point from which it has not been treated. You men have aired your grievances at length. We women have listened in the meekest silence. Now, ye lords of creation! Ye worthy sons of your father Adam! to you we speak.

We claim that at certain hours of the day, morning, noon and night, you have the exclusive right to occupy those conveyances which a benevolent corporation has established for public use. You claim that those women who contest that right are idle, "useless creatures, whose time is at their own disposal. You claim that if those women do so intrude upon you, at least they should not expect you to surrender to them those seats which you, not they, deserve to occupy. And so you hold forth bringing your wrongs to public notice; and oddly enough, your protests seem to have no effect upon those who should be effected. The women, in the perversity of their hearts, continue to crowd into full cars, and accept those seats which you feel compelled to offer.

But, more oddly still, you men, there is a fact that there are in this city women who have to work, and work hard, for their daily bread; delicate women, needing, perhaps as much as your wives and daughters, care and attention, but who through stress of circumstances are compelled not only to support themselves but others. The cars will carry these women a long dark walk after a day of toil, but, forsooth, you wish to ride, you are very tired, a little out of door exercise will do them good. So when one of them enters a full car you glow upon her as if she were committing mortal sin, and you will say to the woman a long dark walk after a day of toil, but, forsooth, you wish to ride, you are very tired, a little out of door exercise will do them good.

So when one of them enters a full car you glow upon her as if she were committing mortal sin, and you will say to the woman a long dark walk after a day of toil, but, forsooth, you wish to ride, you are very tired, a little out of door exercise will do them good. CHESS.

[Address all communications and exchanges for this column to the Chess Editor.] Chess Directory.—St. Paul Chess Club, 223 Washburn, corner Fourth. Tuesday and Friday evenings. Visitors are welcome.

To Correspondents. W. S. C. City.—Will answer next week. Your problem seems to have more than one solution. 1. Q-Q B6 will not do in Problem 9. The Black King has an exit at K-Q 3. Black King.—You have discriminated the Doctors, are you? End-Games 10. Occurring in play at the St. Paul club room, Dec. 4, 1884.

Mr. S.—Black—10 Pieces. White now moved and upon Black's reply announced mate in two. The move made, all Black's pieces were lost, and an easy win, and was, we think, the best on the board. What was it?
