sho have described the secret machinery of political events both in France and Italy, it is plain from very early days down to times so recent as that of the second French empire, balls and the making of history are to be closely associated. There is at least one ball, however, which has an indisputable and two well-known operas, one by Auber, the other by Verdi, have rendered the public familiar with the occurrence. It is needless to observe, however, that history has been a trifle perverted in order to meet the require ments of the lyric stage. Both in "Gustave and the "Ballo in Maschera" love is mag the pivot on which the tragedy turns, and the death of the king is ascribed to the vengeance of an injured lover and husband. In Verdi's beautiful work we have indeed the of Richard, duke of Boston) presented to us as a perjured friend and adulterer. Capt. Ankarstrom's wife, on the other hand, or Courte Renato, as he is named in the opera, figures as a manly personage endowed with every virtue, whose crime positively appeals to sympathy. Though, of course, there is nothing in his story to show that Gustavus III. made love to Capt. Ankarstrom's wife, or that the assassination of the king was connected with anything more than political motives, it is certain, nevertheless, that Ankarstrom showed himself most eager to perform the foul deed. He was associated with three other conspirators-Ribbings, Horn and Pechlin,—and begged hard that the task of putting an end to the king's life might be committed to him. The rest, however, in-sisted upon lots being drawn, and by a re-markable coincidence it fell to the man who was most anxious for the work to accomplish it. That Ankarstrom was animated by some powerful reason for his hatred is sufficiently evident from the manner in which be m

Jefferson, like most of his class in Virginia in those days, was "land poor," and the practices of buying and selling on indefinitely long credits, of never paying or receiving each for 'anything, of purchasing extensions of indebtedness at ruinous rates, were enough of themselves to have ruined a man of larger means and of more frugal habits than Mr. Jefferson, and he, unfortunately, was never a man either of large means or of frugal habits. "By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctor's bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency of disease. Hundreds of subthe maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point, We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."
