Dr. Carroll on George Washington.

The usually large congregation that assembled in the Presbyterian church was reinforced by many from the general public who desired to listen to the special sermon by Rev. Dr. Carroll, The Parable of the Patriot—the Man and his Monument. He took as his text Heb. xi., 4, "Being dead he yet speaketh."

In the national capital was a pageant recently that filled the nation's field of view, and challenged as well the broad eye of the world. While the glories of the dedication ceremonies still linger, and the eloquent fulfils of the orators still are heard, we desire that you should behold the monument for the man and the man for the monument. The shaft lifts itself higher than any on earth; just symbol of the man commemorated, who reached a loftier height than any of the orators still are heard, we desire that you should behold the monument for the man and the man for the monument.

The monument means courage. Here the speaker dwelt at length upon the meaning of the word; showing its counterfeits, and emphasizing the fine and rare quality. That it meant human "heartage," and then he applied it and illustrated it by striking incidents in the life of Washington in which his courage appeared, including, sacrificial, modest, wise, laughed at obstacles and its superb self-poise—a multitude of great traits in one—a composite worthy of a monument.

Again, the monument means unity, fraternity, friendship—a trinity which Washington embodied by precept and example in his official life and official life.

Again, the monument stands for liberty—the liberty which Washington incarnated—a reasonable liberty, a religious liberty, a liberty with God in it; in defense of such liberty his sword was unsheathed, and wielded, and bequeathed; to such liberty consecrating his patriotic weapon. To it he is referring when he writes of the "innate spirit of freedom," of the "innate spirit of freedom."

The speaker here very graphically described the scene where Washington refused a crown and refused to be a monarch. His name is immortal as the hero of Liberty.

Again the monument means victory. Not merely for America, presenting a new nation and a new civilization to the world, but a victory grander far; not relative, but personal; not material, but moral; not temporal, but eternal. The speaker here closely reviewed and revealed Washington's religious life—his moral elevation, his Christian exaltation—born from his youth on to manhood, through life into death; until in the valley of great glory he met his Redeemer with the King of kings, in the specter of the universe, he came off more than conqueror. This picture was wonderful, rising into the sublime, riveted the attention, and thrilling his hearers.

Land of Cakes and Her Peasant Poet, or Scotland and its Poets. The lecturer will do justice to his theme.

Yesterday afternoon a preacher went to Dutchman and had an open air preaching. He found a lot of boys and young men at play and began talking to them in German. At first they were unruly and he received several snow balls, but as he continued his talk they became orderly, several of them removing their caps and hats. It was all done by the power of kindness.

Highway Robbery.

Correspondence of the Globe.

A dastardly highway robbery and attempted murder occurred last Monday night about fourteen miles from this city, near the town of Goodhue. Henry Strauss, a farmer, left here in the afternoon, and when he was just beyond Burkhardt's a person ran up and asked for a ride. This was granted. Later, Mr. Strauss was found with three serious wounds on his head, supposed to have been made with a leaden slug-shot. Fifty dollars in cash and a check for the same amount had been stolen from him. It is thought that the deed was committed by the person who asked for a ride, Oscar J. Carlson, and he was arrested on suspicion in Mazepa.

He was recognized by Mr. Strauss, and was held in bonds of $5,000, in default of which he was committed to jail.

A SPECIMEN SPONGE

Of the Class That Clings to First Circles in the World.

From the Washington Capital.

A curiosity is a man seen at the white house every Saturday afternoon and at evening card receptions given by ladies in society. He made his debut here, so to speak, a year ago, as Mr. Blank Blank of England. He is quite English in physique, and affects the English accent perfectly when speaking.

He is rather fine-looking, and, with his good figure and iron-gray side whiskers, might be mistaken for an English lord. He insists on his double name, Mr. Blank Blank, and pleadingly protests when anybody parts his name in the middle by addressing him as "Mr. Blank." He is to be seen everywhere, and always at the social gatherings to supper or with them on his arm for a promenade. One house, where the hostess looked with anxious face when asked: "Can you tell me the name of that gentleman?" a lady gazed back, helplessly: "He comes to my house, but I do not know his name."

The wife of the cabinet maker, after discussing the matter, "He comes to our receptions without an invitation. We don't know him and have never invited him to come, but he makes himself as much at home as if a friend of my family, and I hear that he has also been to the evening parties of Mrs. [name] and [name]. If the man is from England it is some time ago, as he really hails from a Western state, where he had a career of dissipation and his family labored hard to reform him. They succeeded in making a sober man of him and to keep him from repeating his former life in a department here and furnishes him with pocket money, as well as the visible means of support. In the meantime he is everywhere in society, going to the best houses uninvited as Mr. Blank Blank of England, and playing his cards with the best of them. That would be using an inelegant expression, bring a bluish to the face of a government agent."

A Sharp Newspaper Reporter

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—Charles Keefe, editor of a Wall street paper, has been assailing Cyrus W. Field for some time. The latter is also the subject of an assault in the Herald, and has just brought suit against Bennett in London. Keefe, in 1873, was reporter on the Times. He was so poor when engaged that the city editor furnished him bed and board till his first stipend was due. In a change on the paper he went to the Wall street. The Times was then to do financial paper. In the midst of his life he said to have owned a house on Fifth avenue, and to have paid out cash for any number of rainy days. He had milked the market by using the columns of the Times, and when discovered that this work was discharged. He is still wealthy, but has had many ups and downs in Wall street.
