THE LADY RAMBLER

Discourses on Street Car Philanthropy.

Those individuals who take a pessimistic view of mankind at large, and affirm that human beings are heartless, cold-natured, selfish animals, probably never saw a man lose a dime in a crowded street car. The dime, you know, falls between the bars of the floor-grating, and the man's fingers are just too big to extricate it. Every eye in the car, by some mysterious instinct, becomes instantly riveted upon the point of disappearance, and as the man grows red in the face the on-lookers become excited and begin offering advice. A woman volunteers the loan of a hairpin, and pencils and various other utensils are produced. The excitement really becomes painful, a young man sighs of relief, the ostensible object of the search is a grating, but the man, completely unmoved, again lets it slip from his fingers. Even the phlegmatic driver looks interested, and smiles sardonically as the man, resolved to conquer or die, reaches for the grating. At someone's great mind conceives a brilliant idea; it is suggested that the grating be lifted. Happy thought. Amid a breathless silence the feat is achieved, whereupon the man triumphantly pockets the grating, and the other passengers retire into their ordinary shells of reserve and self-absorption, but, all the pessimists in the world to the contrary, we know that the shells are thin and easily slipped off.

Yes, my dear girl, the inventor of the Tam O'Shanter may be supposed that you would wear it plumb on the back of your head, tied down with strings, but let us be charitable enough to give him the benefit of the doubt, and accredit him with better taste.

Those plaited jackets are exceedingly becoming to gentlemen who are constructed on the plan of a well-regulated bean pole, but if I were a man with a figure which in geometry could be described as a cube I think I would affect some other style.

And now a young man has gotten mashed on a pretty girl who wore a bunch of violets on the street, and thinks the flowers are responsible for the impression produced; and he wonders that all women don't go about with their combs and pins fastened by knots of pale pink roses and clusters of daisies; and he talks of the sweet scent of blossoms wafted down how hot, dusty highways, and how they soothe and refresh his olfactory nerves. Well, he is really poetical, this young man. But he ought to know from sad experience that scents of violets and roses cost a heap of money, and so also do nosegays; and he should remember that he, himself, is the very same youth who waxes eloquent upon the subject of ornaments in female dress, and asserts that poor men cannot afford to marry the reckless girls of the period. Perhaps he and his friends to be a little more logical and consistent in their statements, the girls might in time be able to discover what is expected of them, and just how far economy may safely be sacrificed to prettiness.

The schoolmaster is evidently abroad again; for, though that Jackson street sign which afforded the passer-by that "hot snapper" had been obtained within his grasp, a Seventh street dealer notifies the public that there will be on his premises a great reduction sale of crockery "at once."

Our very young ladies are more than repudiating the workbooks of their grandmothers, the modern articles closely resembling in size and shape a large pillow slip. Either silk or velvet is used in their construction, and they are elaborately embroidered, their size allowing full scope to the fancies of their owners; any one which was ornamented with the entire set system, and avaries and avaries are frequently represented full size. The things always seem full, too, and you are in a continual state of wonderment as to what they can possibly contain, and every time you see one tantalizing visions of cheese and doughnuts and gingerbread fit before your mental vision.

I see that our people are beginning to cultivate lilies of the valley. With their present method of planting them in the most unsuitable, unsheltered spots, they may succeed in raising good crops of leaves, but the name of the flower is significant; it loves cool, quiet, shady nooks and in them only will freely bloom.

The small girl first longs for a doll, and then her youth years after a parasol. Of the doll she is in time wearied; of the parasol, never; and the older she grows the dearer does it become. It is always a fresh delight to her heart and she ever blesses the wisdom of its obtaining. Upon the first mid day of spring she fetters it out, and autumn winds blow very chill before she makes up her mind to lay it aside, for well she knows that the parasol has no rival as an emblem of lovelessness or a palliator of ugliness. Of course not every woman can so manage a parasol as to produce the desired effect. It takes considerable experience to always get just the right attitude and to reconcile the position of the sun to a becoming and not a discomfiting shade. There will be a literary entertainment interspersed with a national day's sport. Hundreds of their friends will accompany them.

good opportunity to visit her. He couldn't leave the city for more than an hour in the afternoon and arrived at Hamline just in time to take in the president's reception. That functionary, possibly divining the full purpose of the young visitor, fastened to her the president's card, and she entered into conversation with him, introduced him to his wife, and ended by inviting him to supper. There was no way out of it. Our young friend was obliged to go to the refreshment room with the president, and there, on the other side of the room, looking her prettiest, enveloped in the daintiest of white, sat the one he came to see. He couldn't go to her, however, and just as he was finishing his dish of strawberries, the president's wife came in to begin offering advice. He said naughtily words all the way to St. Paul.

The Chi Psi association of the Northwest held its ninth annual reunion and banquet on Tuesday evening at the West hotel. About an hour was spent in a reception and social intercourse previous to the banquet, which was commenced at 10 p. m. Among the toasts responded to were: How I Became a Chi Psi, by F. B. Snyder, who enlarged upon the mysteries of "rushing" through the horrors of initiation. MINNEAPOLIS SOCIETY. A brilliant, but not gay week—Social and Personal Notes.

Last week was big with events of a social character, but was not at all prolific. The attention of society people has been engrossed by only one or two special events, but they have been of unusual magnitude. The commencements at the Minnesota and Hamline universities, with their attendant social exercises, occupied the first part of the week, and a starling musical festival eclipsed everything else at the end, with a few swell weddings sandwiched in between them. The Chi Psi fraternity gave a gorgeous banquet at the West on Tuesday night and a few important events were scattered about the city during the week, week plays anything but a star part in a social resume, unimportant as it is in detail.

GENERAL SOCIAL SAUCE. Arrangements have been completed by which the centenary Chautauque assembly will be held at Chautauque during the general assembly this summer. Brown, Miss Elizabeth Day, Mrs. James, R. B. McKenney. Of this number all, with the exception of Miss Day and Mrs. James, will graduate. The party will occupy a separate cottage at Chautauque during the summer. Several of the number will start June 20.

Next Tuesday evening the Caledonian club will give its farewell literary and musical social of the season in Curtis hall. The literary numbers will include a recitation, Wallace and Bruce, by Mr. Clerihew and Col. Fairman; and a recitation by Miss Leavelle. There will be two orchestral selections, "The Industrious Waltzes" and "Au Revoir;" a violin duet by Miss Wagner and Walter Lamp. J. Cochrane will sing "Scots, wha, hae wi' Wallace Bled?" Prof. Hall, "Aria Buffo;" Miss Clerihew, "Tyrolean Waltz Song;" Miss Nellie Perry, "The Love's Last Me;" and a select song by Mr. Hastings. An hour will be devoted to social chat.

Among the private parties and receptions given during the week were the following: Mrs. H. J. Locker, Wednesday evening, 2300 Portland; Mrs. Hall, Wednesday evening, 904 University avenue; Mrs. A. M.
