A really good man is the noblest work of God, and George Palmes is a good man in that there is any such in this or in any other man's community. A personal knowledge of him for over a quarter of a century ought to qualify me to judge of his character correctly, and when thoroughly analyzed but few men, in my opinion, are better than George Palmes. I remember him when on Bridge square and carrying on business as a florist, and when he was a young man when adversity swept the firm out of existence, and still later I remember him struggling for a foot-hold, and all through this he was the same kind-hearted, patient, industrious citizen, and he has lived over a quarter of a century with his hair a little grayer, his step a little weaker, but with his manhood unimpaired and his honesty unimpacted. Mr. Palmes is a trim-built gentleman, always pleasant, always kind, and his eyes are always bright, but by no means rich, yet he is the possessor of a humble, happy home, and has the universal respect of his fellow-men. He was born in Connecticut in 1828; was reared and educated in Michigan; came to St. Paul in 1856, and has resided here continuously ever since. After his dissolution of partnership with Mr. Mott he started in business on a small scale, and has constantly increased his trade until his establishment is now considered the best in the city. His first business was that of a tailoring establishment in St. Paul or in the state. He married Miss Hall in 1853, who died several years ago.

TIMOTHY BEARDON. A familiar name is Mr. Beardon's, well and favorably known in this city, where, for so many years, he has resided here as a builder. Like good many other able fellows, he came from Ireland, born in Cork in 1857; emigrated with his parents to this country when quite young, and was satisfied with no other place but with the great city of New York, where he resided for some time, and then came to St. Paul in 1871, and in 1872, since that time, though one of thirteen of a family, yet Timothy deemed it essentially necessary to his future welfare to know something practically, so he learned the trade of a carpenter, and armed with this weapon, and the name of the young city of St. Paul in 1876, and in connection with Richard Ireland rustled about and built the residence of H. M. Rice on Summit avenue, which was one of his first achievements. Since then he has done a good deal of work in this city, and has been in the discharge of his business, energetic and a competent, popular railroad official.

J. B. RICE. Almost as long back as I can remember anything about railroads, especially in this state, "Jud" Rice was a name to be remembered, and as common as it were, a part and parcel of them. If my memory serves me correctly, he was the conductor who ran the first passenger train on the St. Paul & Pacific railroad (now the Manitoba), from this city to St. Andrew, and I was one of the passengers on that occasion, July 2, 1862, or twenty-three years ago, I well remember how proud "Jud" was as it then seemed to me, over a vast prairie, and how solemnly, and how dignifiedly when only 19 years old, began work for the Michigan Central railroad, and after coming to St. Paul in 1856, he was a conductor on what is now the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba road, six years, and then in 1865, he was made assistant superintendent of the same road, and holds the position still, having charge of the Fergus Falls division. He was born in Yankee land, Vermont, in 1830. "Jud" is a small, or rather spare man, very affable, and of a kindly nature, and in the discharge of his business, energetic and a competent, popular railroad official.

MERRILL RYDER. A quiet, easy, pleasant man is Merrill Ryder, and when one comes to learn something of his early history he is surprised at his equality, for he was a young man, first in the river country when the Indian outbreak occurred, and on returning in 1862, all the passengers in the stage that followed him were massacred, while he came through safely. His brother had a store at Big Stone Lake, and one day Indians called him out and requested the loan of his rifle. Young Ryder brought it to him, and he fell dead. Mr. Ryder was born in Connecticut in 1827; educated at the common schools of his native land, and in New Hartford for seven years, when he came West in 1854, and to St. Paul in 1856. After his return from the Red river country, as already stated, he continued the selling and buying of furs until 1867, when he attended the manufacture of the same and the traffic in game, and has engaged in this business for many years, having been a permanent resident of St. Paul from 1858. One would infer from his frontier life that Mr. Ryder would have some of the peculiar characteristics of the border, and yet he is as gentle as a morning smile, and as pleasant as a morning smile. He is a man of moderate size, of pleasing address, of eccentric notions, and yet he is a gentleman of the most refined and quiet, moderate, and quiet.

WILLIAM MOONEY. A butcher carries a lawyer's office, "Sir," he asks, "when a dog does any damage is not his owner responsible?" "Certainly," "That being the case, as your dog has just carried a line of my goods, you will be responsible for it." "Nothing could be more just, replied the lawyer, "and as my fee for professional advice is $5, you will call it square." The lawyer was an old settler of 1849. The butcher was a young man.

ROBERT SMITH. Born in England in 1828; educated at the grammar school; emigrated to Buffalo, N. Y., in 1855; engaged in the butcher business; came to St. Paul in 1856; in 1857 was steward of the St. Paul club; kept the house for J. D. Nelson; engaged with the firm of Scott & Scott in 1861, where he remained seven years; was bookkeeper in the boot and shoe store of W. J. Smith & Co. in 1869, and then was with McCarty and Gastner in the commission business; in 1873 became the chaplain of the Bethel mission of the Western Seaman's Friend society; is now engaged in various missionary work.

JOHN SUMMERS. Mr. Summers is an excellent specimen of a self-made man, and it is really through the force of his industry and individuality that he has attained his present position as owner and landlord of the Windsor hotel. Years ago, when he was a journeyman carpenter, then as a journeyman painter, then as a journeyman cooper, then he sold out and built and took possession of the Windsor hotel in 1877. He was born in Scotland in 1830; was educated in the high school of Glasgow; learned the trade of a carpenter in his native city; emigrated to Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1852; to Chicago in 1853, where he worked three years and then came to St. Paul in 1856, with results as already narrated. Mr. Summers shows his Scotch characteristics by his strong and somewhat angular points of character, and what he has made financially has been by that unceasing and indomitable will-power which marks the man. He is industrious, practical, energetic, self-reliant, and cautious, yet progressive, pleasant, a solid, business, common-sense citizen.

GOING! GOING! GOING! how much do I hear? one dollar! one dollar! one dollar! going—go—go! This is the first memory of the old Temple, and it is a memory with piles of goods and a crowd of people in a store down on East Third street, in the year 1856, was rattling off a lingo of words interspersed with fun, song and poetry. He was a fine-looking man, with a fresh complexion, and a long, flowing beard. His voice was clear and melodious, and he held his audience by sheer force of good nature. And so he continued for years in that busy auction room, but only an occasional day, or so, when he was born in Maine in 1823 and naturally fell into the lumbering business with his father; then "went in on his own hook" for two years, and then entered mercantile pursuits and commenced his career in this city in 1850, when he was engaged in the property confiscated by the state during the Indian war; all condemned property of the United States, and at one time a warehouse full of hardware. He then opened what was known as Moffett's Castle and had a good hotel for a year, or so, when he sold out and started a dining-room on Jackson street, and from there leased the Commercial hotel on Seventh street, where he has been for several years. Mr. Temple is a man of energy and of business tact, and has a good deal of real estate, and is a very worthy, pleasant gentleman.

CALVIN S. ULINE. Very few men were more popular when in active business life in this city, than Col. Uline. He was a "hall fellow well met," liberal, kind-hearted; always one of the best of the old-time, and the oldest, and the most dominant trait in his character. He was a young, sprightly fellow when he came to this city, but years have made him more sedate and have filled out the frame work to a respectable degree. He is now the same old, but a different "Cal." Born in New York in 1833, he received an academic education at Charlottesville, and moved to New Jersey in 1850, but in 1853 took up his residence in Indiana, and became distributing clerk in the Boston office of the same company. Mr. Uline first came to St. Paul in 1856, and in connection with Richard Ireland rustled about and built the residence of H. M. Rice on Summit avenue, which was one of his first achievements. Since then he has done a good deal of work in this city, and has been in the discharge of his business, energetic and a competent, popular railroad official.

JOHN WEBER. Mr. Weber was born in Switzerland in 1827 and educated in his native land; arrived in New York from the old country and worked at his trade as a stonemason for four years, and then came to St. Paul, and worked for six years for B. Presley, spent three years in the mines of Idaho, traveled through different states and finally returned to St. Paul and opened a grocery store on the old Fort Snelling, now Seventh street, and then in 1859, he married Miss Catherine Auld in 1859. Mr. Weber is a quiet, steady man, and has built up quite a nice trade by years of industry and fair dealing.

REAL ESTATE. He purchased forty acres in Ramsey county, just this side of the Hennepin line, some years ago, for $1,200; sold for $1,600, worth $40,000 now; bought two lots on the corner of Third street and Franklin street, for which he paid $1,500; now worth $15,000, with improvements $25,000. He has been married twice and has two sons and a daughter.

A BALLOON GOES UP THE WRONG WAY. When in Bridgeport he agreed to bring 20,000 people into the city by the ascension of a balloon, and for this purpose the great balloon was inflated in New York with gas, and with a balloon of the capacity of 5,000 yards. The 20,000 people came, the balloon went up, but it was the wrong way, for it struck the side of a barn and disappeared as a good many other things have.

PLUNDERERS COULD NOT USE. The guardianship seems perfect as against burglars and sneak thieves. The lesses of said guardianship bring evidence of identity every time they try to get into the city, and are able to repeat their individual passwords to the proper official. Then they must open a lock in each of two gateways, the combination being divulged only to tenants.

WILLIAM MOONEY. A native of Wisconsin, born in 1852, Mr. Mooney has been in this city for some time, and commenced learning the wagon trade in 1874, serving three years as an apprentice with Mine Bros.; worked for A. Perkins; became a partner with his old boss; sold out but continued in his business.

TEBERENCE O'BRIEN. Born in Ireland in 1832, Mr. O'Brien at the age of 13 years emigrated to Montreal, Canada, then to Vermont, then to New York and Pennsylvania, and came to St. Paul in 1856; was a joiner and carpenter by trade; worked on the Wabasha bridge; formed a partnership with H. J. Roche in 1861, and in 1862, when the partnership was dissolved, he carried on the business in West St. Paul successfully, demonstrating what can be achieved by earnest, hard labor.

People seem fond of the town this year. The streets still present a bright and well-populated appearance, the houses seem to be the main occupants, and those resorts which are open are thronged by people who show in their clothes and manners that they are well-to-do and in "society." There seems to be an entire dearth of those strangers and baculic visitors who formerly thronged into New York as regularly as June came around. A number of ingenious theories have been advanced to account for the absence of the countryman. Hotel keepers, who feel the loss of them most severely, have adopted the expedient of a somewhat change of administration has so unsettled the farmers and storekeepers of the backwoods, and the rush for office is so great, that they are all

GOING TO WASHINGTON. The streets of the capital of New York. It seemed difficult for the leaders to realize that the regiment of big booted, black coated, bewhiskered and sun burned men, who are content with any sort of accommodation and pleased with any fare, has permanently disappeared. Long rows of chairs stand out in front of the turn-out house, the Park Avenue hotel and the Metropolitan to welcome the suburban pilgrim; but he cometh not. The seats are nicely cushioned, comfortable and numerous, but only an occasional city guest, or a sleepy cab driver occupies one. At the theaters open the audiences are composed of men in evening dress, women in fashionable garments, visiting Englishmen, dukes, talky clerks and men about town. At Delmonico's, the tables are occupied by people who dine there all the time, through Coaches are often seen on the avenue. In a word, all of New York that is here in the winter is here now. Even the falling off in the annual rush to Europe is causing no comment. A widely accepted idea is that all this is the result of the

A prominent society woman here has just started the fashion of having a private hansom. This is the first result of the hansom craze. The streets are literally alive with these little, two-wheeled, flowerly decorated and laughing women. The papers have seriously discussed the propriety of driving about in hansom, and many of them have decided that the comical position in which a woman is naturally placed when she is in a hansom should be distasteful and obnoxious to a lady of refinement and a good idea of the proprieties. Nevertheless, good and proper girls, well dressed women and matrons and highly respected matrons go rattling about in one horse, and no one has ever thought of finding fault with their sport. Women may generally be trusted in matters of this sort. Their natural instinct keeps them from rushing into harm. At all events, they make the laws themselves, and they have no reason to be ashamed of their conduct. The rattlers and ratters, who have unfortunately had on too hot boots, and who are now in as good condition to bite and do harm as they would be later in the season. The number of snakes kept increasing in the city, and the young men in their terror maintain that they have encountered 150 or 200 snakes of the rattlesnake and blacksnake variety. Finally it was noticed that the snakes were fighting among themselves, and on inspection it was seen that the rattlers were attacking the ratters, and vice versa, both being warmed up to their work by the beating had received from the young men. Although blacksnakes and rattlers mingle with each other during the long cold winter months, they rarely come into contact separate after a deathly cold. The blacksnakes are sometimes vicious and the rattlers on other occasions. A Spitz dog which followed the young men was an object of especial hatred, and was most bitterly resented by the ratters, who themselves about his body, and he had to such an extent that he swelled to twice his natural size. After a fight of about fifteen minutes the man had everything his own way, and cutters and ratters were scattered away as trophies of the fray. They were sold to an old medicine man, who extracts the oil from the fat to sell to persons afflicted with rheumatism, neuralgia, sprains and other ailments, and he is highly valued by those who believe in the wonderful curative qualities of the snake oil. The young men cut off the rattles of many of the snakes, some having as high as fifteen or twenty, and for any number of rattles. One had six inches to six feet, one large black snake, a perfect specimen, measuring a trifle over six feet. Had it not been for the fight between the rival snakes, the young men might have been dangerously bitten.

BRUN COXED A FIGHT. A Port Jervis dispatch says: On Sunday morning Mrs. Snyder of Glen Wild, Sullivan county, stepped by her back door to shake her table-cloth, when she dropped the cloth and screamed, for approaching her from behind, a cool and deliberate attack at a lightning pace. She had been as big as a yearling heifer. It had come out of the deep gully below Bowers' saw-mill. Mrs. Snyder's screams brought others to the scene, and the man, looking on in apparent enjoyment of the scene, his preparation had made, turned and walked slowly to the road on the opposite side of Snyder's field. He took his way down the road, and then went off into the woods. There were no other signs of the man, but he was believed to be a good day for trout, but there were six men left in the place who knew something about coons, and they concluded to learn something about bears. They got their guns, called five dogs to follow them, and they followed the trail for three miles. The dogs were ahead, and evidently eager for a fray. By and by the hunters heard a great commotion, and in a short time four out of the five dogs were lying dead. The bear never stopped when they reached the hunters, but kept right on in the direction of open country. From the expression of their eyes the amateur hunters concluded that the dogs had been shot from some distance, and from somewhere beyond them the sound of a heavy body approaching through the brush, and the next instant the huge form of the bear appeared, and it kept coming right on. The hunters turned and followed the bear, and when they were far in the rear, the bear, however, followed, and shortly after the young men reached Snyder's house brain appeared on the edge of the field, and afterward walked comically across it within ten rods of the house. When he got opposite the house he stopped, and the hunters fired a volley at him. A shot or two took effect, for the bear made off, limping badly, and disappeared in the gully below the mill. The hunters had the courage to follow him, and last accounts he was still at large. The fifth dog was found in the woods at the spot where the bear had evidently fallen foul of the five. It was dead and every bone in its body broken.

RECIPIENCY. A well-known and wealthy resident of Woodward avenue recently united by marriage his large interests to those of a fashionable and wealthy widow. The bride was a young woman who was about to start for a tour in Texas and Mexico. She wished to take plenty of money along to those regions, and her husband, who was a well-to-do gentleman, was of the opinion that she would be able to do so. He gave her a large sum of money, and she was very pleased with the result. She was very well-to-do, and she was very much pleased with the result. She was very well-to-do, and she was very much pleased with the result.

THE WOMAN'S GLOBE. Suggestions Concerning the First Meal of the Day and How It May be Served. Women Losing the Poetry of Motion—How Fashion Originates—A Youth's Mistake. Some Things That Everyone Should Know—Household Novelties—Decorations. There is probably no meal that requires more thought on the part of the careful housekeeper than breakfast, and none that, as a general rule, receives less consideration. It is an obvious fact in most households that a little more consideration given to the first meal of the day would very materially increase not only the comfort, but also the kindly feelings that it is so essential to cultivate in the home circle. A great many art to serve up odds, ends and scraps left from previous meals in a slipshod sort of fashion, placing upon the table before those who have a careless appetite at best, and taking away the desire, rather than gratifying it by some dainty dish arranged by deft fingers, aided by a little forethought.

BEAUTY AT A DISCOUNT. The statements of this merchant were confirmed by a lady who changes her gloves at least twice a month. She wears a six-and-a-half Jovian herself, but says: "Now my hand is about medium, neither large nor small, but I know how it is to go into a store and have a six-and-a-half handed you by the hand, and you can easily stretch five-and-three-quarters over my hand. I would not be so foolish as to withdraw my patronage on that account, but I know of ladies who would. It is too bad that a girl should lose her place on that account, yet I don't doubt the story you tell me." BEAUTY IS AT A PREMIUM. A case came under the observation of a GLOBE reporter last week, that showed very forcibly how mankind, in the masculine line, is "beauty by a single cent." The proprietor of a Chicago store wanted an assistant, and was inquiring where an eligible person might be found. The reporter suggested that an abundance of such talent was lying around loose, but the quality was diminished when the proprietor said: "Oh! I want a young lady, and a pretty one, too." This newsdealer was a sharp one and a deep student of human nature. Only a few days ago he had said, and his course of reasoning was this: "The quality of my depot are all men. Not one lady in a hundred wants the daily papers of the country or even the illustrated periodicals. A pretty girl is an attraction and men who come to see her certainly come again. Once pleased they are sure to come back. I have tried it and know all about it, and I can give you several cases in point. Last week, while the Mexican editors were here, one of them came in to see me. He was a very nice fellow. I had a pretty girl there then, and this descendant of Montezuma became interested in her.
