SPURIOUS BUTTER.

Commissioner Rice Thinks It Threatensthe Dairy Product. Dairy Commissioner Rice of Zumbrota was at the office of the commission at the capitol all day yesterday. He has been actively engaged of late in making arrangements for the National convention of dairy commissioners, to meet in Chicago on the 11th of November. To a GLOBE reporter, Mr. Rice said there had been a general change in the nature and arrangements of the meeting recently. When it was found that the National convention of the Butter, Egg and Cheese association was set for the same dates in Chicago, it had been thought best to hold a joint convention. The objects sought by the dairy commissioners of the various states could be accomplished fully as well, and there would be the added benefit of a intimate friends of the family participated. larger attendance. Mr. Rice thought that at least thirty states would be represented, includ-ing all except some of the Southern ones, where the dairy interests are of little value.
"There is need of a system of interstate legislation, as you might call it," said Mr. Rice, "if the manufacture and sale of spurious butter is to be stopped. It is impossible for a single isolated state, with the best law possible, to prevent the traffic, even in its own limits. Minnesota cannot prevent a considerable quantity of the spurious stuff being handled within its own boundaries, so long as in Dakota, Wisconsin and Iowa there is no law against its sale. The commission here has found it impossible this year. We have been able to do a great deal, as at St. Paul and Minneapolis, which were the chief distributing points, we can make CAREFUL INSPECTIONS

It is provided that punishment may be either a fine or imprisonment, but as to the latter, nothing said or indicated whether it shall be in the jail or state prison. Municipal judges will not take the responsibility of settling the question and so our cases have BEEN MUCH DELAYED.

"There are two now in Minneapolis, on which Judge Bailey says he will not assume the authority of determining the law and we must wait until we can get the cases before the district court." 'You believe that the law has accomplished good in this state?" was asked.

"I do," replied Mr. Rice. "The amount of oleomargarine that has been shipped and will be shipped to Minnesota this coming year will be 80 per cent. less than the quantity last year. This large decrease is by no means wholly due to the law, but comes in a measure from the lower price of dairy butter, which has made the business less profitable. At the same time I believe the law has had something to do in keeping down the quantity. There is one other defect in our law, and that is that trials of offenders are required to be made before juries. It is almost impossible that twelve men, who do not know the danger in which the manufacture and sale of spuri-ous butter is putting the whole dairy interest of this country, dairy interest of this country, will bring in a verdict against a man for selling an article for what he advertises it.

The trials ought to be before judges who would simply give a finding in accordance with the letter of the law."

A GRAND WEDDING.

Marriage of Miss Carrie Brake and

W. H. Lightner -- Other Society. Miss Carrie Drake, daughter of E. F. Drake, was married to W. H. Lightner in the First Baptist church yesterday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Lightner of New Jersey, brother of the groom, officiating, assisted by Rev. Dr. Mabie, paster of the church in which the ceremonies occurred. The pulpit was beautifully decorated with lilies, ferns, myrtle and ivy, and the organ was with sere autumn leaves.

At 5 o'clock C. F. Morse, organist, touched the keys of the instrument and the first notes of an offertoire in A, by Batiste, swelled through the building, which had already begun to fill with people.

first number was followed by The prayer in F, by Guilmont, a march in C by Weber and a melody in B by Guilmont. At the conclusion of the last rendition the nave of the church was filled with people and hardly a seat was obtainable. Just as the hands of the clock were pointing to 5:45 the doors of the central aisle were thrown open and the brides-maids, Miss Mary Drake, Miss Leila Dean, Miss Rachel Rice and Miss Hattie Gotzian, advanced from the vestibule bearing bouquets of lilies, and were followed by the groom, W. H. Lightner, his best man, Clarence Lightner, and Ushers George Squires, Frank Hanson, Howard Elmer and A. M. Drake. THE BRIDE FOLLOWED on the arm of her father. As the bridal party marched down the aisle the organ peeled forth the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin, and the scene was very impressive. During the marriage ceremo-"Elsa's Bridal Music at the Minster" from Lohengrin was softly played. The service was opened by Rev. Dr. Mabie with prayer and the bonds were tied by Mr. Lightner. Hardly more than fifteen minutes were consumed in the exercises and the march from the church was led by the groom and the bride, while Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March" was played. The walk from the street to the church door was laid with velvet carpet and arched with canvas. At the conclusion of the wedding a reception was held at the residence of the bride's father, corner Lafayette and Woodward The presents were numerous and valuable.

The bride was altogether lovely in the traditional white satin. Her gown was, of course, long, the train perfectly plain but for a full ruche of tulle at the edge, while the front and sides were draped with duchesse point, the square veil being of the same superb material.

Miss Mamie Drake was in pale green and Miss Dean in all the states represented to protect the dairy against the sale of oleomargarine, butterine and other imitations of that product of the dairy. lace and diamonds; Mrs. F. A. Fogg, Scheffer, Miss Carol Dean, who wore black ace over scarlet satin; Mrs. G. H. Ranney, Mrs. W. H. Sanborn, whose costume was of golden brown satin; Mrs. Wilder, in black velvet, and Miss Gotzian; but it is iseless to attempt a full description of all the elegant toilets. Chrysanthemums were the favorite flowers, huge ribbon-tied bunches of them being carried by many of the ladies, while for corsage bouquets they seemed fully as popular as roses. SALE OF OLD MAIDS.

Last evening a very unique little entertainment was given at the pleasant residence of Mr. W. R. Bartlett at Merriam send it into our state in small quantities. It has always been used largely in the pineries in Northern Minnesota and in the way I speak of it is still sent up there. Our law does not allow us to make scizure of it while it is being shipped, and it is impossible for us to hunt down all the cases there are scattered along the boundaries of Dalvita and Wisconsin. ries of Dakota and Wisconsin.

"Our law is defective in two or three points. In the first place, we cannot make seizures of spurious butter, but are obliged to detect the actual sale, and then prosecute the offender. In many cases it is almost impossible to get evidence that will stand law. Sometimes we find a dealer who has a quantity of it on hand, but he tells us he has not sold any of it; in fact, that he did that the real fun began. When they were seated at the tables the old maids, and paid for them, of course owned them. They consequently took them to the tables with them. Then they were seated at the tables the old maids.

The special scenery and costumes are brilliant, and would undoubtedly be recognized as correct by a person familiar with Japan. A part of one scene is a handsome fire screen, painted by Mr. Fred Powers, treasurer of the house. The performance will be repeated the remainder of the week.

MacCarthy was present in uniform, and surprised not a few wirh his agility and grace in the lancers. The company broke ranks when the orchestra started up, "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

OTHER SOCIEY. Mrs. E. N. Larpenteur, mother of Dr. Larpenteur, celebrated her 39th birthday yesterday, many of her friends calling to pay their respects.

Last evening, at the residence of Adam Ran, on George street, West St. Paul, his daughter, Miss Lizzie, was married to Ossian Strong of the P. H. Kelly company. A reception followed the ceremony.
H. C. Schurmeier of St. Paul and Miss

Bertha L. Calderwood of Galena were married in the latter city last evening. The wedding of Stanley Paul of St. Paul and Miss Sadie Riley of Indianapolis took place yesterday at the home of the bride, in the latter city. Mr. and Mrs. Paul will make St. Paul their home, and reside at the residence of Mrs. Armstrong.

The flames were bursting through the roof of the building and it looked for awhile as though a conflagration of dangerous proportions was on hand, as the buildings to the south were rickety frame structures. Four streams were turned on, and after a half hour's hard fighting, the fire was got under control, not, however, before it had completely gutted the ware-house and scorched the roof of the adjoining building, which was owned by Patrick Hennessey and the lower part occupied by A. A MYSTERIOUS VISIT.

The Builders of the Mill City Inspecting St. Paul. One of the best-natured parties that has visited St. Paul for some time took tea at the Ryan hotel last evening. It was made up of ten prominent architects and builders from Minneapolis, the following being the list: Hon. Henry Downs, F. A. Fisher, George Goodwin, C. F. Haglin, Charles Morse, F. B. Long, Fred Kees, George Orff. George Libby and Frank Grygla. As is usual with excursionists, they visited the leading features of interest in the city, and expressed themselves surprised at the won-derful growth of St. Paul. They had visited this section of the country some years ago and would hardly have recognized the city with its palatial warehouses and business blocks. They took a run through the residence portion of the city, and were amazed at the elegant residences they beheld. "We are simply a band of tourists," said Mr. Kees, when asked the object of their

I'm not going to stop to make a speech this trip."
"We wanted to get some points or building," said Mr. Morse.

These are a sample of the replies they gave a GLOBE reporter, and though nothing was said at the time, it was hinted that they were down looking up a few facts for siasts of the Mill City advertise, on the quiet, will forever crush out all sparks of life that have been glowing in St. Paul since Frank McDonald filed the census returns.

AMUSEMENTS. The "Mikado" at the Grand-The Gilmore Concert.

His royal highness, the Mikado of Japan, made his first appearance in St. Paul before a large and delighted audience at the Grand last night. St. Paul is so hungry for comic opera that almost any show of that character would catch 'em now, and probably a good many of the audience went ast night just for the sake of seeing a new opera. They were happily disappointed not only in seeing a new opera, but in seeing it well sung and acted. It went off with great spirit, and, after the people began to catch the spirit of it, all the important members were encored and re-encored. The company is evidently used to this sort of thing, for at each representa-

James, Prof. Stiles Raymond and Miss Eleanor sisted of instrumental music for piano, or gan, violin and 'cello, with all their combiward furnishing the parlors of the proposed new church.

The date of the great Gilmore concerts is now definitely fixed upon as Monday after-noon and evening, Nov. 9, after instead of before the Minneapolis engagement. Already responses are pouring in in answer to the request for subscribers. In some in stances blocks of ten, twelve and twenty seats were applied for. The management has fixed next Monday as the date when reserved seats can be secured at the box office for subscribers only. A personal canvass is being made, subscription blanks have been left at the music stores, and it is to be hoped that all classes of citizens will respond liberally, the price of tickets being within the reach of all.

The Battle of Gettysburg picture was exhibited for the first time last evening at the Exposition rink. It is a splendid panorama, and will recall vividly to the old soldiers the field on which they fought and bled and left their comrades to die.

The Seventh street dime museum is pulling good crowds, each performance after-noon and evening being crowded. The giant Cooper is proving especially popular with the ladies, and the acting of the people on the stage would do credit to a much more expensive performance.

Another Suit Against the City.

Miss Rosa Jerris, an English lady, has commenced a suit in the U.S. Circuit court, against the city of St. Paul, for the purpose of recovering $25,750 for injuries received by her in consequence of a defective sidewalk. In her complaint she sets forth that she is an alien, and a subject of Great Britain; that on December 5, 1884. while she was walking along on the pavement near Moore's block, at the Seven corners, a plank gave away and she partially fell though the opening thus made, and in doing so struck her stomach upon the pavement, whereby she was very seriously injured; that the injuries then received caused her afterwards to frequently spit blood, and shocked her nervous system, and that before the accident she was a strong, healthy woman. She therefore asks that the city be made to pay her $25,000 for the injuries she has sustained and in addition thereto $750 that she has paid out for medicine and medical attendance, making in all the total sum of $25,750.

Charles Breslauer, who was arrested some weeks ago on a telegram from an officer at Winona and taken to that city, returned to St. Paul yesterday. He was charged with having been one of the party two or three years and on his return stopped at Winona to visit old school friends about the time of the occurrence for which he was arrested. Mr. H. A Fair Equestrienne's Accident, and a Husband. Mlle. Brownetti's gold-mounted riding whip executed a series of sharp little taps against her bespangled skirts, as she ejaculated rather excitedly:

"I love you, I love you-that is what you men are constantly saying. How am I to know, Dick Stratton, if it is myself you care for, or the salary that Firefly and I can earn? I wish to goodness I had just remained Dolly Brown instead of becoming the celebrated equestrienne, Mlle. Brownetti. Then I would have stood a chance, perhaps, of being loved for myself."

Ignoring the reproachful glance of her companion's eye. she added hastily: "Now, there's Mason. He swears he adores me, and yet if 1 should break my leg to-night, I wonder if there'd be one faithful among my many admirers?" Then smiling archly, she continued mischievously: "Do you think it would be worth my while to sacrifice a limb?' "Dolly, you know—"

Holding up a pretty dimpled hand, Miss

Dolly, with a coquettish pout, stayed the words upon his lips, then shaking her head and assuming a doleful look, she rejoined:
"But they all say that."

A saucy, rippling laugh escaped her pretty lips, as, after making him a most iquant little curtsy, she tripped gracefully toward the ring entrance, whilst Dick Stratton, biting his nether lip, exclaimed savagely:

"An artful little coquette! I'll cease to love her from this moment." Which resolve he immediately set in force by hurrying to see that everything was as it should be about the trappings of Dolly's pretty mare, Firefly. The applause was deafening as Mile. Brownetti executed one daring feat after another upon her barebacked steed.

Once or twice the little lady's eyes rested rather anxiously upon Dick Stratton's handsome face, and she was decidedly piqued at his apparent neglect, for not once during the pauses between her acts did he approach her.

Not that she lacked for attention, a beyv of her admirers being on duty in the ring, but the fair equestrienne appeared not to be her usual amiable self this evening, for her devoted followers were one and all snubbed. Mdlle. Brownetti was just about to do the finish by placing her foot upon the mare's neck when she lost her balance and fell, striking heavily against the ring curb. Perhaps if she had seen how Dick Stratton hurried to her assistance, pushing the others aside as he, tenderly raising her in his arms, bore her from the ring, she would have had more faith in one man's love.

The morning papers discussed at length the accident to the popular equestrienne, the accident to the popular equestrienne, one of them graphically setting forth the dangerous risks of a circus rider, and concluding with:

"We regret sincerely the unfortunate accident to our fair equestrienne. As far as we can learn, although the little lady may live for years, never again will she de light an audience with her daring and graceful performance." Notes of condolence, flowers, etc., poured in upon the stricken equestrienne, and the first day she was able to receive, many were the calls she had. the calls see had.

She laughed softly to herself as one by one her admirers bowed themselves out.

How aniety their ardor had cooled! "So How quickly their ardor had cooled! "So sorry," etc., but not one had said to her—now she was disabled from earning her living, "Will you give me the right to work for you? Will you be my wife?' With a half-expectant, half-wistful look she glanced at the clock upon the mantel, as with a smile, followed rather quickly by a sigh, she ejaculated:

"I wonder if he will fail me, too?" Then "I wonder it he will fail me, too?" Then with a comical little twinkle shining in her eyes, she added: "If he should, and he my last chance!"

Uncommonly pretty did Mlle. Brownetti look, despite her serious accident, as she lay propped up by soft pillows on a wide lay propped to be coming and coing is here.

lounge, the color coming and going in her fair cheeks as she listened for a certain step. But when the owner of that ster entered the room, it was a very sedate greeting he received. Raising her hand to his lips, he exclaimed

passionately:

emotion, said:

"To think of this, my darling!" "Yes, it's dreadful, isn't it?" answered she, softly patting the hand he had kissed, while again the comical twinkle shone in her eyes, but it died slowly out, and a sweet shyness stole in its place beneath the lowered lids, as Dick, his voice hoarse with

"When you were well and strong you drove the love I offered you back upon me, doubting its truth. I tried to kill the love you despised, but it lived in spite of me, and so once more I bring it to you. My darling try to love me a little—be my wife. Give me the right to protect and shield legs?" And Dolly was actually laughing, while the tears clung to her dark lash "Dolly, you love me a little," and Dick, gaining courage, passed his arm about the young girl's shoulder.

As she did not rebuke him, she did not probably notice it. "Well, just a little," was the demure reply, followed by: "Wont you look funny wheeling me about in one of those chairs! Not that I have made up my mind to accept you. You see, it would be such a dreadful sacrifice on your part."

Pressing her tenderly to him, he whis-Sacrifice, Dolly, when I love you better than my life?"

Then his lips touched gently those near his own, as he murmured:

"Dolly, my wife, is it not?"
"I don't suppose I can do better. It's not likely a helpless thing like me will ever get another offer." Then smiling at his protesting look, she added: "Now just let me blindfold you for a minute, and when I say three you can take it off."

As he would have submitted to anything from those fair hands, he obediently kneit down to have the handkerchief placed about his eyes, and then went and stood as he was requested, a little way off.

Suddenly he felt two plump arms stealing about his neck, and forgetting all about the one, two, three business, he tore off the bandage, and there, beside him, hiding her blushing face upon his shoulder, stood Dolly.

"You're—you're not—" "Minus legs?" she arehly interrupted, as, humming an aria, she waltzed gracefully around him "But, Dolly-" ejaculated Dick in wonderment.

"You dear old fellow, you!" and Dolly nestled up against his coat sleeve, as she continued with: "Don't you see, it was the only way I had of finding out, and the accident happened so opportunely. But, Dick, I think right down in my heart I believed in you; anyway, I would never have got over it if you hadn't—"

The rest of Dolly's sentence was communicated to Dick's left-hand breast-pocket, and was never divulged by it, that I am
