

Daily Globe

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

LEWIS BAKER.

TERMS. PER YEAR, BY MAIL, POSTAGE PREPAID. DAILY, six days in the week. $3.00

Correspondence containing important news selected from every point. Rejected communications cannot be returned.

ST. PAUL, WEDNESDAY, NOV. 4, 1893.

THE WASHINGTON OFFICE OF THE GLOBE IS AT THE NORTHEAST CORNER OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE AND FOURTEENTH STREET.

THE CHICAGO OFFICE OF THE GLOBE IS AT 117 N. MICHIGAN STREET.

THE MINNEAPOLIS OFFICE OF THE GLOBE IS AT NO. 257 FIRST AVENUE SOUTH.

THE ST. LOUIS OFFICE OF THE GLOBE IS AT 215 1/2 SOUTH MAIN STREET.

DAILY WEATHER BULLETIN.

OFFICE OF CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER, WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3, 10 p.m.—Observations taken at the same moment of time at all stations.

Table with columns: Stations, Wind, Clouds, Rain, etc. Includes Duluth, St. Paul, Chicago, etc.

THE HOME REPORT.

Barometer, 30.05; thermometer, 53; relative humidity, 77; wind, east; weather, cloudy; amount of rainfall, 0.0; maximum thermometer, 43; minimum thermometer, 27; fall, none; ice, 0.0.

Signal Corps, U. S. A. INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4, 1 a. m.—For the upper Mississippi valley: Local rains and showers with variable winds generally shifting westerly, slightly colder weather and rising barometer.

THE DAILY GLOBE.

First Page—Shipping Political News. Second Page—Local News. Third Page—Editorial, St. Paul and Miscellaneous Telegrams.

NUB OF THE NEWS.

Prohibition in Iowa is a dead issue.

Supr. Kieble criticises the state high schools.

Iowa does not roll up the usual Republican victories.

The Illinois Central will not accept double-track cars.

A benefit concert was given Frank Wood of St. Paul.

Northern Pacific earnings show an increase for October.

The state board of health recommends general vaccination.

The Minneapolis Academy of Sciences discussed Minnesota water.

The Milwaukee & St. Paul has not purchased the Diamond road.

Rev. Norman Seaver was installed pastor of Park Congregational church.

Dr. Pearson, well-known in Minneapolis, was arrested as an abductor.

New piers and workhouses will be built at Duluth by the Northern Pacific.

The Minneapolis officials are still keeping up the crusade against the roomers.

Changes are to be made in the management of the Theatre Comique in Minneapolis.

Rumors of Secretary Manning's resignation are said to be without foundation in fact.

Gov. Hill of New York brought the Empire state into the Democratic column with a rush.

The American barge Cashos was wrecked in Yanduma's straits, seven of the crew being lost.

Rumors are current that the Northern Pacific will complete the Cascade branch next season.

It is reported from Washington that Mr. Zachary will be appointed governor of Dakota next week.

Vice President De Graff of the board of managers of the state agricultural society has resigned.

Numerous St. Paul citizens have expressed their sentiments on the vaccination of pupils in the public schools.

Mahone is forever disposed of and Gen. Lee can assume the duties of the gubernatorial office in Virginia.

C. J. Peterson of Trenton township, Wisconsin, has been missing since Oct. 23, and no clue as to his whereabouts.

Ex-Senator Campbell of Litchfield says the people in his part of the state do not want an extra session of the legislature.

In the trial of Editor Stead of the Pall Mall Gazette, the justice instructed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty.

Minneapolis head millers have published a card of thanks to those who participated in the dedication of their monument.

The state board of corrections and charities at its quarterly meeting fixed the date of the annual conference at St. Paul as Aug. 15, 1894.

Throughout Dakota a light vote was polled, but little interest being taken. Huron seems to be the favorite for temporary capital. The returns come in slowly from interior points.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat says the slowness with which governments move cannot be better illustrated than by the two commissions which for a generation have been working on the South to the boundary between this country and Mexico, and the other on the North, to determine where the United States territory ends and Canada begins. Each party takes its time, there being no occasion, in their opinion, for haste about the matter; the survivors enjoy themselves as well as they can with frequent holidays, the presumption being that the boundary line will wait their pleasure, and thus the work lags from one year to another and thus the work upon another is exhausted, but the survivors enjoy the job, which may explain its permanence.

Nowhere in the annals of time or of the history of nations is there recorded an event when the future of a nation was so pregnant with great possibilities as that which lies before Burmah. Theobald's loyal queen awaits with nervous apprehension the hour of her coronation, and earnestly pleads with her king to avert the possible harm which might follow from burning gunpowder on the altar of his country. The mother queen of England will doubtless be touched by the appeal of the Burmese queen and direct her gunners to withhold their fire until the time of Europe is come.

vising some system by which human bodies could be distinguished from ordinary freight or baggage.

A SPLENDID TRIUMPH.

It was a glorious victory. And it is none the less so because it is greater than the most sanguine had hoped for. The result in New York is a surprise because it was supposed that the warring Democratic factions in New York city would sacrifice the state ticket in a scramble for the local offices. And, moreover, because it was known that DAVENPORT's barrel was on top and that HILL was poor impulse, the expectation was that the money bags would prove stronger than honest sentiment.

But the result shows that the time has come when honesty prevails. It is a glorious condition for the country that it has reached a point when a poor man can defeat a millionaire in a political contest—and that too in the Empire state of the Union. One lesson of the New York election is that the money power is no longer an important factor in elections. Another valuable result is that it eliminates the Pharisee from politics. In fact the most significant fact connected with the splendid Democratic victory in New York yesterday is that the egotistical and Pharisaical Mugwump is a fraud as a political leader. His arrogant assumption of holding the balance of power between the political parties is knocked into a cocked hat. The curtain has dropped forever on Mugwumpian pretensions. He will never again be the uncertain and disturbing element in the politics of the country. But the most gratifying result is that the Republicans on their own motion put the CLEVELAND administration on trial, and the verdict was in favor of the administration. Mr. CLEVELAND did not seek such an issue. Just a few days ago he stated his position in this regard. Talking to a personal friend, who sat by him at his desk, where he labors harder and more conscientiously than the humblest employe of the government, the president said:

I realize all my obligations to the party that elected me, and I intend to discharge those obligations with a loyalty that knows no reserve or qualification, it is impossible that I can lay aside my higher duties to the whole people and present the spectacle of the chief executive of a great nation engaged in partisan endeavor. I take a different and, I think, a truer view of the relations existing between me and the Democratic party. I regard it as my appointed task to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the people that they were wise in entrusting their destinies to the Democracy, to show that the party which I represent may be relied upon to promote the prosperity of the country, conserve and perpetuate its free institutions, uphold its dignity and keep its honor unspotted from the world. This is the task which I have set my hand and from which I shall not look back under any stress or tension. I hear the echoes of some idle discontent. The waves of certain inconsiderable clamor penetrate to this retreat. But they move me no more than a zephyr moves the mountain. I am turned from my chosen path by such complaints no more than the Himalayas are stirred from their foundations by the wandering breeze.

In this dignified attitude the president has been sustained. But it was not the president who was on trial. It was the Democratic party and it has been amply vindicated. Not only did the Democratic factions stand together in New York city, but all through the state there has been a decided Democratic gain. But, however gratifying the result of the New York election, it was in Virginia that the decisive reform victory was gained. The overthrow of MAHON is the signal defeat of the most vicious element of our politics. The Republican cause in Virginia was the cause of the spoilsman. It was there that the reform administration was on trial and there the triumph has been greatest. Taking it altogether yesterday's work was a splendid achievement for the friends of good and honest government. It will encourage the administration at Washington to go ahead in the good work of administrative reform and of purifying the civil service. The Democratic party has established itself in the confidence and respect of the nation. Its duty now is to retain the position it has acquired. The meaning of the New York election is that Democrats are to be put in power, but it also means that none but good and honest Democrats shall be chosen. The camp followers are to be relegated to the rear. Democratic supremacy has come to stay.

CANADIAN ELEPHANTS.

Between RIEL and the small-pox the Canadians are kept in hot water. Sir JORGE MACDONALD is probably the most roundly abused man to-day on the American continent. His enemies hold him responsible for the small-pox epidemic, and all the world knows that he made a terrible blunder when he prosecuted RIEL for treason. If RIEL is executed the Dominion government will be the greatest sufferer. If he is reprieved the government will stand abashed in the eyes of all the world. It is rather a complicated condition of affairs they have up there at best. The antagonisms of race and creed make it an absolute impossibility for the Canadians to agree on anything. But the unfortunate part of it for the governor general is that he is denounced as fiercely by his own side as by the opposition. His party friends say that if MACDONALD had tried RIEL for murder or any one of a half dozen crimes he might be specially sympathetic with the fellow. They say that in these modern days strong governments do not punish treason with death. The kind of treason RIEL was convicted of is too closely allied to revolution not to excite sympathy. The individual who leads a revolt against oppressive power is always invested with a halo of heroism, and, if RIEL is executed, he will live in history as a martyr to political freedom. Although only a poor half-breed, his memory will be honored because he dared to defend his people against the ruffian speculators who were cheating them out of their lands. Now that the Dominion government realizes the awkward condition into which it has forced itself it is seeking for a loophole in the possible outcome of the RIEL matter and forcibly stated by the Hon. PETER MITCHELL in a recent interview. He says:

It would be accusing the government of the grossest ignorance to assume that they did not expect the death sentence to be challenged when the moment came for enforcing it in a case of treason. No one need doubt that the government expected just such moral resistance to an execution for treason as has now developed. They knew not only that they would be charged with doing an unprecedented thing—unprecedented in the history of Europe in the last fifty years—by hanging RIEL, but they must have made up their minds that their course would be when the last moment came. It is true certain government organs say RIEL must hang, they do not meet the statement that the hanging of RIEL would be an exception to the treatment of treason offenders throughout the empire. They do not argue the point. They do not attempt to justify this exceptional treatment. They do not point to any precedent. They shift the question altogether. Why is this? Is it not an evidence of weakness in the government's case? Is it not admitting that no answer can be made? I do not wish to make any improper reflections upon the government's course during the trial. I am satisfied that the course for which he should have been executed long ago. He had a fair trial on the charge of treason. He was assisted by able counsel. But it does seem that the blunder made in trying him for treason was made in the hope of saving his life. He was really as guilty of murder as those of whom he has been called a human life, and had he been tried for murder his life would, no doubt, have been forfeited. When the government elected to try him for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position they have now no face to the issue. That issue is, will the government of Canada execute the death penalty for treason? The answer is, yes, but practically abolished throughout the empire for the last fifty years? The whole question is summed up in these few words: The government of Canada has elected to try a man for a crime which has not been punished in the imperial dominions for the last half century, they must, of course, have been aware of the fact that they were saving him from the gallows. As he stands in Oklahoma his escape is a matter of course. It is not surprising that he should have fled. He possessed very little intelligence indeed. Having deliberately placed himself in this position