AT HOME. The Social Festivities of a Gay Carnival Week.

While the carnival lasts progressive enchere and other modern popular entertainments will be superceded by toboggan parties. The latter not only affords more real enjoyment to the square inch than any of the parlor games, but gives bloom and life-like color to those who have not been accustomed to participating in such sport.

In last Sunday's GLOBE At Home offered a prize to the couple who would consent to have their wedding ceremony performed in the ice palace. The offer is a bona fide one, and At Home will not go back on his word.

At Home—in answer to your suggestion in today's GLOBE I wish to inform you that I am willing to get married in the ice palace providing that you will find me a wife to whom I would suit and who would suit me. So if you agree, come to work, and let the ladies know that I am between 28 and 30 years old, occupying a paying position and belong to a good and respectable family.

At Home did not state he would provide the bride, he has been too busy searching for one for himself and is still in the ring. He, however, sympathizes with the applicant and would gladly assist him were he able.

At the Acker Street Methodist church on Tuesday evening a literary entertainment was given, in which a number of the younger members of the church took part. which our every appearance has been received. Each progress has been triumphant, and "Here comes the dear girls!" is the signal for cheers loud and prolonged.

To be sure an occasional on-looker who has no poetry in his soul is heard to exclaim, "Oh, look at the women! Take them away!" and the omnipresent small boy is not so promptly annihilated as he should be when he calls attention to a sleigh-load of fair damsels with "Oh, my! kids, look at the Black Maria!" or recognizes a prominent young society lady with "Hello, Juliet! How are you, old stocking?" But "Rats" is seldom heard, and we confess ourselves more than satisfied with our reception.

My dear young lady, you had better be sure that a gray uniform is the same shade as your own before you inform the gentleman who wears it that you are quite ready to go down with him, otherwise your escort may come to entertain hard thoughts concerning you and, dear boy, remember that if you address a blue toque that is but the hint of a shade darker than your own, you are quite liable to be completely crushed to the earth by the strong glare of its fair weaver.

As our uniforms lose their snowy whiteness and acquire in turn all shades from delicate cream to the rich gray of a floor cloth, we regard them with increasing satisfaction, for each layer of color is the outward and visible sign of a jolly time and a unique experience.

"Fun?" said a St. George boy, "well I should remark, I've had more fun in the last three weeks than I ever had before in an equal number of years."

The extent of one's popularity is in direct proportion to the number of badges he wears, and some of our young men would have difficulty in obtaining entrance in the most select of European courts, on the strength of their decorations.

People who have a mania for that sort of thing are making collections of badges.

The admiration felt by the young gentlemen of each club for its lady members is only equalled by the enthusiasm with which the ladies regard the masculine portion of their organizations. The other night at the storming of the castle every effective bomb that went up was greeted by every uniformed young lady with cries of "Oh! Our boys sent that one! aren't they sweet?"
