Cinnabar (Mont.) Letter.

The Yellowstone National Park, the greatest of wonderlands, has been ably written up each year by tourists and newspaper correspondents, all of whom have visited it during the summer-time.

The upper basin is at all times the most attractive spot in the park. Here the geysered the most remarkable collection of geysered on the face of the earth.

On the opposite bank of the Firehole river is the Castle geyser, which, as I saw it on this frosty morning, was spouting from its yellow-coated throat a column of water five feet thick and as high, accompanied by a most awful rumbling and growling.

From the Mammoth Hot Springs I rode on an old trail over the summit of Summit mountain, and here I must say the scene spread out before upon miles and miles of nature's canvas was simply sublime.

The road from the upper basin to Yellowstone lake was in reality no road at all. It was simply a beaten trail over the snow.

The grandest sight in the park is beyond question the lower falls of the Yellowstone. I have seen them four times, and each time the beautiful sight presented by the Falls of Niagara in winter and of the wonderful ice bridge formed at their base by the freezing waters.

Traveling on for some miles I crossed another mountain, upon the summit of which is situated the beautiful "Lake of the Woods." The surface of this lake is a field of ice, frozen from shore to shore in one glassy sheet.

Nowhere in the wonderful park nor elsewhere on the globe can there be found such an extensive view of a combination of stupendous natural scenery and gorgeous colors.

This whole basin is overflowing with sealing hot water, which not only is at the sixty degree below freezing point was able to cool. When I came in sight of Lower Geyser basin the sight was one which I shall never forget.
