THE STREET ILLUMINATION.

St. Paul's Thoroughfares as They Appear by Gas Light and Colored Globes.

Third street presented a very beautiful and lively appearance last evening during the hours of illumination. Ropes were stretched across the street at Wabasha and Sibley streets, and also out of all the intervening cross streets, prohibiting horses and vehicles from entering. This left the entire space free to pedestrians, and the sidewalks would have been deserted but for the fact that the street proper could not contain the people witnessing the display.

The first view of the illumination was obtained in the center of the street and here the crowd promenade in twos and fours with arms interlocked, gentlemen with ladies and gentlemen without ladies, children with their parents and children without their parents, forming a nearly solid mass of moving humanity from Wabasha to Sibley street.

ARCH AT ROBERT AND THIRD. There was but one verdict on the illumination. It was magnificent. Along each side of the street about ten feet from the ground was a gas pipe rising into an arch every few feet and at every foot was a burning gas jet surrounded with a globe. Besides these arches there arose at short intervals a pipe several feet high, perpendicular with several cross pieces, and these again were filled with lights and globes. At each street intersection gigantic arches of iron pipe spanned the thoroughfare and these continued as many globes, tier above tier, as the space would allow.

ARCH AT THIRD AND WABASHA. At Bridge square the arch spans the intersection of the street diagonally both ways, forming a globe exactly like the several of the other arches are built in a similar position, but all are of entirely different designs. At Jackson street three arches are built, two over Third street and one over Jackson. The globes are varicolored, one arch containing only blue with red at the corners and center, another with amber and another of various colors, no two alike being placed next each other. Along the sides of the streets the globes were of all imaginable hues and shapes, mingled in an irregular regularity which was as beautiful as it was striking. The tops of many arches are surrounded by a globe exactly like tall hat resting on the crown, while others contain mortars, etc., the whole forming an infinite variety of effect within illuminated within. All the electric lights on the street were also in full blast, and in addition, many firms had hung out skeleton signs, in which tiny gas jets traced the name of the house.

The whole combined to make the street as bright as day, and from the brow of the hill at Cedar street, looking toward Sibley, the spectacle was something to be remembered. The flashing of the many colored side lights, and the mingling of red, blue and amber arches, formed a kaleidoscopic perspective which attracted the spectator to look again or to slightly change his position for a different effect. The whole scene was a marvelous change of light and color, and thousands of people who witnessed it showed how the public appreciated both the enormous outlay and the enterprise accomplishing such a result. Above Wabasha street Third street was illuminated on one side as far as St. Peter, but here the arch had not been completed, nor had the arches on Fourth and Fifth streets or St. Peter and around Rice park progressed far enough to be illuminated. This will increase the size of the spectacle this evening and the rest of the week.

TO AID THE SUFFERERS. A Report of the Marshall County Relief Committee—Plan of Assistance. Maj. Storn of this city and Maj. Landberg of Minneapolis, appointed as a committee to investigate the needs of the Marshall county sufferers from the hail storm in July, submitted a report yesterday at the capitol. Present at the meeting were the members of the committee, Mayor Rice and D. H. Noyes of St. Paul, Gen. Jennison, the governor's private secretary, and Mayor Ames, of Minneapolis. The report is voluminous. It gives the number of families who need aid at 153, and the whole number of persons at 731. Of these 625 need provisions and 513 clothing. In the section desolated, which is fifty miles in length and eight miles wide, 390 horses, 91 oxen and 295 cows are without food. The extent of the crops injured by the storm is estimated at 15,000 acres. The amount needed at once to assist the sufferers to live and keep their cattle alive is about $20,000. This sum, it is claimed, will tide over the suffering until the legislative meets, at which time provisions will be made by state appropriation. The plan suggested is to have $10,000 raised in each of the twin cities, the understanding being that the governor will recommend to the legislature an appropriation to repay the cities or citizens for the amount advanced. It is not the intention to reimburse, in any way, the sufferers for their losses, but simply to advance them sufficient money and clothes to allow them to live through the winter.

A BISHOP'S ADVENTURE.

Mr. Gilbert's Experience in Montana with a Stray Horse—A Serious Mistake. A good story is told of the Rev. M. N. Gilbert, rector of Christ church, who has just been elected assistant bishop of Minnesota. Several years of his early experience in the ministry were spent in Western Montana, where his labors extended over a large tract of country which he traveled on horseback and as a result formed a wide acquaintance with the residents. Four years after leaving this field of duty, in the summer of 1884, Mr. Gilbert spent his vacation in this section. With his brother, a resident of Butte city, a fishing trip was planned, and the two went to Anaconda to fit out for the trip. A ranchman living near a creek, and agreed to furnish the two saddle horses, a proposition which was accepted, and the day named when the ranchman should send the horses into the city. Their pack animals ready, the two horses arrived as expected, and mounting them the two Gilberts set out for a journey over the mountains—known as the Warm Spring range—to Rock creek for their sport.

When about fifteen miles from town, in a wild mountain trail, they met two men on foot. The men looked like tramps, but as nearly everyone does in that country nothing was thought of this until one of the strangers planted himself square in front of Rev. Mr. Gilbert, exclaiming, "That's my horse."

Mr. Gilbert told him he was mistaken, and as he had no time to bandy words with him, requested the privilege of the road. Thereupon the stranger attempted to clutch the rein, which Mr. Gilbert avoided and drove past him. Nothing more was thought of the incident, and the fishing party camped on a little prairie in the mountains for the night. Late in the evening they were joined by another member whom they had expected, and for his accommodation they did not break camp until late the next day.

About 10 o'clock, when preparing to leave, they saw two horsemen galloping toward them and soon the Rev. Mr. Gilbert recognized a deputy sheriff whom he had known while preaching there. He remarked to his brother, "What do you suppose Dickenson is riding around out here for?" The two horsemen drew up and dismounted, the officer fumbling in his pockets for something. While doing this he got a good look at the faces of the two Gilberts, with whom he was acquainted, but whose rough dress prevented him from recognizing. Taking a second look he dropped on the ground and roared with laughter. He was so convulsed that it was a good while before he was able to explain the cause of his merriment, his companion meanwhile looking on, much astonished at seeing an officer of the law act so strangely.

However, Dickenson recovered, shook hands with Mr. Gilbert, and showed a warrant for the arrest of John Doe on the charge of horse stealing. Then everybody laughed except the man who claimed the horse, who couldn't see anything comical in the situation. The officer explained that late the night before the sheriff had ridden into Anaconda and told that he had seen a man riding his horse, which had been stolen several months before; a warrant had been issued and the pursuit begun immediately. The man insisted on having his horse, while Mr. Gilbert explained that the horse belonged to a friend of theirs, and they could not possibly give it up without consulting him, and moreover they wanted to go on their fishing trip unmolested, and they needed the horse. After considerable argument the deputy sheriff succeeded in persuading the man who owned the horse that his friends were honest, one of them a clergyman, and that his horse would come back all right. The Gilberts agreed to return the horse to Anaconda at the end of their trip, and everything was satisfactorily arranged.

On the return Mr. Gilbert appeared in a justice court, where the man proved property in the horse, the ranchman sending word that he did not own the animal, and took him. The defendant was allowed to depart on paying costs, which amounted to some $20. It transpired that both horses were strays which had come to the ranch, had been advertised and not claimed. In the adjoining county there were several other horses were hung by vigilantes for horse stealing, and had not Mr. Gilbert been acquainted with the officer it might have been a serious case.

Bustlers for Trade.

One of the liveliest business houses in this city is Lally Bros., wholesale and retail liquor dealers, corner of Seventh and Sibley streets. Emulating the example set by the city and the Third street business houses, they made an elaborate decoration in front of their store, consisting of a large shield studded with gas jets, in the center of which is an elegantly constructed L. The pillars and windows are profusely decked with red, white and blue bunting tastefully arranged. Numerous gilded stars and four-leaved clovers are tastefully attached to the large plate windows, and colored lights lend a fine effect to the whole scene. In connection with the display it is well to say that no firm in the West sells a finer line of wines, liquors and cigars than they do, and no firm carries a larger or more complete stock. Their cellars are filled with the choicest French wines and liquors, and everything is kept that will tempt the palate of the thirsty.

A Serious Mistake. James F. Hill, son of W. L. Hill of 638 Burr street, was found in an insensible condition yesterday morning in one of the coal bins immediately beneath the trestle work of St. Paul and Duluth railway track near its intersection with lower Third street. His head was badly cut and other evidences of a severe head injury were manifest on looking at him. He was taken to the police station, booked as a "vagrant from Chicago" and placed in a cell. The charge of "drunkenness" was preferred against him. In the cell he remained in a semi-unconscious condition until his father came for him and had him conveyed home.

The boy was engaged as a mounted carrier for the Pioneer Press, and was engaged in delivering papers on the early White Bear train when, it is supposed, he fell through the trestlework and injured himself by falling on the coal, some fourteen feet below. His injuries are of a serious character. Turkey Spied at the police station claims that the boy acted as drunk when he arrived at the station, and answered "Chicago" when asked his residence. The turnkey said he could not send the injured boy to the city hospital without an order from City Physician Ancker. The father of the boy said that his son's name was on the docket, showing that he gave his proper name, and that with any sort of efforts reasonable ones could have been obtained. He was of the opinion that but for the timely discovery of his son the latter would have died and was not hopeful as to his son's recovery.

The Week's Illumination.

The committee in charge of the illumination announces that the gas will be lighted at 7:30 this evening and the First Regiment band will give a concert in Rice yard, the arches around the park being completed and lighted. Thursday evening illumination at 7:30 and fireworks from Robert street bridge at 8 o'clock. The flight of rockets and shells will be thrown down the river which should be clear of boats as there is some danger accompanying the display. A band stand will be erected on Robert street at the intersection of Third, and after the fireworks the Great American band of fifty pieces will give a promenade concert. Friday evening illumination at 7:30 o'clock and a promenade concert on Third street, from Wabasha to Sibley. Some additional attractions will be added. Saturday evening illumination at 7:30 and promenade concert by the Great American band. Fireworks from Robert street bridge from 10 to 9 o'clock. The illumination will be continued each night until 12:30 o'clock. Six miles of gas pipe have been consumed in the illumination, 11,000 globes and 1,000,000 feet of gas will be burned. Third street, between Wabasha and Sibley street, will be closed to vehicles between the hours of 7:30 and 11 o'clock for the remainder of the week.

A Boy in the Way.

A young civil engineer was trying a few days ago to get some points on Wabasha street. He set his instrument in the middle of the sidewalk and stood behind it, waving both hands to the marker, some hundred feet off. He gesticulated wildly for an instant and then put his eye to the transit to see if the object had been accomplished, meantime holding both arms horizontally. Just at the instant when he was getting the pupil of his eye adjusted a thoughtless 8-year-old boy ran his toy cart ruthlessly against one of the legs of the tripod, sadly knocking it out of position. The expression of the engineer's face at the object of his anger was too small event to swear at.
