[Applause.] The unexpected and somewhat Minneapolis municipal court case was had in the supreme court yesterday be-fore Judges Gilfillan, Mitchell, Vanderburg and Dickinson, coming upon the application of A. N. Jordan and R. L. ominous calm was now for the hrst time broken. At 9:30 o'clock, when Dennis Killbride Penny for a writ of quo warranto com-pelling Judges Bailey and Mahoney to show by what right they hold the seats of special judges of the municipal court, to the exclusion of began his statement, the first noise was heard outside the hall, where several hundred men and boys had collected, crying "God save the queen," and groaning for O'Brien. Every cheer which went up inside the hall was answered by a loud roar and angry the relators, who were duly elected the first Tuesday in April. Attorney Gen-eral Clapp, previous to the opening, filed his written consent that the writ was answered by a loud roar and angry response from without. The erowd outside was now swollen to immense proportions. The meeting was brought to an end by a few remarks from Chairman J, J. Behan, who told the audience to go home peaceably. Then the people started to go out, O'Brien being in the rear. Thinking this to be too remarkable, O'Brien's friends hurried him to the front. He stepped on the sidewalk, wearing his usual silk hat. The moment the Orangemen on the opposite side of the street saw him they raised savage yells and cried: "Here he is," and rushed across the street. Cobble stones and bricks began flying like hail. Women screamed and general confusion reigned. "Ah, they're at it again," said O'Brien in a tone of painful regret more than anger. "Yes, yes," answered the mob. "There he is;" "drag him out here on the street;" "kill him;" "choke him." nied his written consent that the writ of quo warranto should issne, which had the effect of expediting matters and bringing the arguments directly upon the merits of the case. A. D. Smith made the statement for the re-laters, which briefly was that the municipal court act of 1885 was unconstitutional in that it extended the terms of the present incompare was unconstitutional in that it extended the terms of the present incumbents two years longer than the term which they were elected to serve, which ex-pired April 5, 1887; that at the regular election the relators were duly elected election the relators were duly elected and received certificates of election, etc. C. H. Belder, for the respondents, fol-lowed, claiming that the law of 1883 made provision for the interim between 1887 and 1889, when the election is to be held, according to the act of 1885 providing for future elections. The act of 1885 repealed the act of 1883, which authorized the election in 1887, and therefore no election could be held. "TEAR HIM ASUNDER," H. Benton next delivered an exhausted argument for the relators, which covered all the points of that side. He held that an act which assumed to do away with the right to hold an elective onlice must be constitutional if the con-stitution secures to the people the right and they almost burst through O'Brien's bodyguard, which consisted of American special correspondents and local officers of the National league. A man changed hats with O'Brien, as that worn by the latter furnished a target for the mob, and as the party doubled into Wellington street another shower of bricks and broken stones came spinning through the stitution secures to the people the right to elect a judge once in seven years. The legislature might provide for an election for one year and then appoint for the remaining six if an election has filled an office for the time prescribed by the legislature. The legislature to lengthen the term must provide for an election to fill the additional term. The design of the "hold over" clause of the act of 1883 was simply to assure that one officer should directly succeed another. Mr. Benton made the addition point in regard to Judge Mahoney, that while he was elected a special judge, stones came spinning through the crowd. O'Brien and his friends bent crowd. O'Brien and his friends bent their heads, but received the missiles on the body. D. F. Kellogg, the New York Sun correspondent, and John Wall, the r porter of the Associated Press, caught up with O'Brien just on a stoop leading to the house of John Newman, a Protestant, on Medway street, between William and John streets. The doors were connected and a shower of missiles again opened, and a shower of missiles again came across the street. The crowd surged, Wall and Kellogg were FLUNG TO THE GROUND and O'Brien disappeared, evidently into off the municipal court, thus creating a new office which he never was elected to fill. In the afternoon the argument continued, Judge Best, for the respondents, claiming their right to hold office under the "hold over" clause until a successor had been elected and qualified in 1889 as the term expired April 5 1887 Newman's house. The door of Newman's house is barred tightly. Wall and Kellogg, with J. J. Behan, Thomas Sullivan and J. J. Conwell, of the Chicago livan and J. J. Conwell, of the Chicago News, rushed around through the vinegar works, on Ontario street, for the purpose of getting into the house by the back entrance. The mob, however, intercepted them, and they had to fly for their lives. The mob next rushed to the Burnett house, thinking O'Brien was there, shouting: "To h—l with home rule," "Kill him." Although O'Brien was not there they fired volleys of stones at the windows, and then groaned and yelled to their hearts' content. J. M. Wall, the wounded correspondent, attempted to pass the front of the hotel on his way to the telegraph office, but his bandaged head attracted the attention of the Orangemen, who went for him of the Orangemen, who went for him with a rush. The house of an Orangeman named Connely adjoined this alley on the other side, and O'Brien got in there. He was finally smuggled backwards to Devlin's house while the Orange mob was outside yelling for his blood. "I will protect you to the hotel," said Mayor Carson. "I will call out the artillery," "You will." exclaimed O'Brien, sarcastically. "I don't want your protection now. You saw the mob of demons, 500 strong, outside that hall thirsting for my blood while I was addressing a peaceable meeting, and you didn't disperse them. Where was your artillery then, sir? The party then drove to the station to catch the 12:35 p. m. train for Kingston, where it was said the Orangemen were arranging to give another "warm?" reception to the party. In the same car with O'Brien were Lady MacDonald, wife of the Canadian premier; E. C. Baker, M. P. of British Columbia, and Sir Leonard Tilly, lieutenant governor of New Brunswick. Fifty miles out from here the Kingston reception committee met the train and returned here with the party. As the train slowed up at the station on the Place D'Armes, it was seen that a large crowd was assembled there. As at Toronto. In the early part of the evening they would not permit any O'Brienites to wait on the sidewalk outor bremies to wait on the sidewalk outside the hall, and even said, "Move on" to the American correspondents awaiting O'Brien's arrival, but the moment the Orangemen' appeared on the opposite side of the street, many with clubs and sticks in hands, there was no interference by the police. They were allowed to his and the Place D'Armes, it was seen that a large crowd was assembled there. As Mr. O'Brien stepped out of the car he was in the much talked of Kingston, the "Derry of Canada," as it is called. Kingston has a population of 15,000, of whom 5,000 are Catholics. There are only eight policemen and all of them, in command of Chief Horsey, were in waiting. To the surprise of Mr. O'Brien and the rest of the party not a dissenting voice was heard in the storm of cheers which arose as Mr. O'Brien entered the carriage. police. They were allowed to hiss and groan until O'Brien came out. When the latter did come out the policemen, instead of making a circle around himabandoned him and left him to the tenabandoned him and left him to the tender mercies of the yelling Orangemen, who dashed upon him. The policemen were the first to scatter when the stone-throwing commenced. The mob remained outside the hall two hours waiting to kill O'Brien. A man named Howland had his cheek laid open with a blow of a stone. Seargent Nesbitt's head was cut. He said: "I will go through to the end, boys, yet." This sentiment at once was over the descendants of the Ulster farmers. They cheered as heartily as anybody else. Again, when he said: "We will so His Worship W. S. Howland, Mayor of Toronto. Sir: I have the honor to furnish you with the following facts relative to what transpired Wednesday evening connected with Mr. O'Brien, from which you will see that the police department is in no blame for not providing adequate protection on that occasion. From what appeared in the papers and through representations of a New York reporter, who called at my office Wednesday morning, I was led to believe that it was O'Brien's intention to leave Toronto for the West the same in exposing his murderous policy in Ire-land as to make Orangemen as well as Nationalists at last believe that there is Nationalists at last believe that there is only one Lord; he who rules above the cedars and stars." Among other things O'Brien said: "I believe a few misunderstandings which have arisen between the Protestants and Catholic Irishmen can very soon pass away. Thank God they are rapidly passing away and I could not help thinking when I heard to-day that Kingston was known as the Derry of to leave Toronto for the West, the same day. Accordingly I gave directions to have the necessary precaution taken to insure his safe departure from the hotel and railway station. When it was and railway station. When it was found that both the outgoing trains had left the union station without Mr. O'Brien, the officer in charge of the Kingston was known as the Derry of Canada that perhaps the name was a men concluding there was no further need of their services, sent them back to their divisions. Two men, how-ever, were stationed at the hotel and own, ever, were stationed at the hotel am neighborhood. Shortly after 8 o'clos Mr. O'Brien, with a friend, appeared at the door and was immediately recognized by the crowd in the vicinity, some of whom raised a cheer while others groaned. When the patrol sergeant saw that Mr. O'Brien intended taking a walk he strongly urged him not to ven-ture out on foot, as it was unsafe to do so without a strong escort of police. This advice Mr. O'Brien did not choose This advice Mr. O'Brien did not choose to accept, so the sergeant with the other two constables followed to render all the assistance in their power in case Mr. O'Brien should be attacked. It soon became apparent that Mr. O'Brien had chosen an untimely hour to walk abroad, but instead of retracing his steps to the hotel, which he could have reached in safety, he turned down Bay street. Here it was that a few stones were

TOOK TO HIS HEE S and ran till he reached Taylor's shop on Wellington street, through which he passed to the rear, eventually gaining his hotel by the back premises, which he did within ten minutes from the time he started out. The mob continued to throw stones and broke the windows of Taylor's shop, the darkness preventing the constables from seeing who were the Taylor's shop, the darkness preventing the constables from seeing who were the aggressors. Had the crowd really intended to lay violent hands upon Mr. O'Brien they could have done so without serious opposition, but such does not appear to have been their purpose, and it is believed their object was to frighten him more than anything else. After Mr. O'Brien had made good his escape the crowd reassembled in front of his hotel and continued cheering and singing till midnight, when they quietly dispersed. Such, in brief, is what ocsinging till midnight, when they quietly dispersed. Such, in brief, is what occurred so far as Mr. O'Brien was concerned. In conclusion I would say that if the gentleman who left word at police head-quarters of Mr. O'Brien's movements Tuesday had given any intimation of his programme, an ample force of police would have attempted to protect him wherever he went. The statements that have appeared in print as to the occurrences of Wednesday evening have been much exaggerated, and I am afraid are calculated to give undue importance to what, under ordinary circumstances, to what, under ordinary circumstances, would not have been regarded as a very serious matter, though it is much to be regretted that Mr. O'Brien was not permitted to come and go without interference from the citizens of Toronto, who are usually so peaceful and law-abiding.
