SHOPS FOR MAKING MATCHES.

A New Plan Proposed for the Help of Cheerless Bachelors.

London Telegraph.

There is happily no need in England of any state encouragement to matrimony; nevertheless, the law looks on anything which would tend to serve as a positive deterrent to marriage. If bachelors could have their shirts darned and their buttons attached by stepping inside a shop door, one of the great inducements to wedlock would be instantly created. A bachelorhood now is so companionless as wretched and lonely, but clubs have taken away a good deal of the loneliness and most of the misery attaching to the condition would also be abstracted if there were feminine hands always ready to apply the needle in the way which has hitherto been considered the prerogative of wives. It would certainly not do to establish shops of a character to offend decent and useful bachelors, and make them think that unbecumbly assistance was, after all, quite bearable. On the other hand, the button trade might be expected to be somewhat improved in consequence of the general adoption of the new principle. All that is required is that the attendance of a decent and useful maid be chosen for their obliging dispositions and personal charms, and bachelors would rush in thousands to have their garments mended, which they actually need, repairing or not. Neat-handed Phylises sewing on buttons to the collars and cuffs of gentlemen customers would prove a most agreeable and useful addition to the world. They would not have to wait to minister to their off their buttons on purpose and scatter them to the winds. No sooner were they on another than they would be back on another. They would not have to excuse failed, a sock would be sure to spring a leak, or mud would be required to be brushed off, or in some other way the bachelors would be required to make arrangements would be requisitioned. If it be urged that the new system might apply to women as well as men, and that ladies might be tempted to make use of the order to repair personal damage, the reply is that ladies are naturally gifted in the matter of mending, and hardly need the help of a maid. The male sex which is reduced to the most utter helplessness when a thread snaps at the wrong place and at the wrong time.

Nurses to Be Robed Like Brides.

New York Herald.

According to tradition in babies is that their nurses should be arrayed all in ivory white, like a graduate or a bride. The Battenberg baby introduced this latest wrinkle. A gown of heavy white Irish poplin is worn, by the fortunate mothers, and the nurse is adorned with the youthful and royal warts. This is made with plain full skirt, tight waist, with nuton-leg sleeves, a large collar, apron, cuffs, laced lace and a crisp white cap complete the costume. The new Portugal baby is not so fastidious as the Battenberg baby, in white from top to toe, with the royal arms embroidered on the corner of her voluminous aprons. The administration of the nurse is now, by being fitted to a lot of new white apparel. As Mrs. Cleveland will not allow the White House to be a school for nurses, the nurse for the apron of Miss Dorothy's attendant a new model of ironclads is suggested as being fitting and beautiful.

The Meanest Man.

The champion mean man has been found again, this time in a dry goods store. A peculiarly gross counterfeit half-dollar having turned up at the counting-room, this clerk, by name "Harris," was called upon for a "check-piece," he said. A few days afterward the young lady to whom he was engaged came to the store and purchased some articles, and she was asked to pay. She took her money to the desk and returned with the change. The young lady departed, but half an hour later, while P. was waiting for a customer, a woman was given, she said, a bad half-dollar in change, and she produced the counterfeit. P. had purchased for 10 cents, and she had given him a good half-dollar while bringing her money from the desk.

SHADOWS.

As though I went by beckoning hands clothed hidden.

I neared, as when one answers calling fond.

The "There" of which "There" from "Here" is hidden—

Its meshes grew gauzy, and I saw beyond

Against its screen my eyes started straight

The soul of sight searching just warp and woof.

Until I thought not think my gaze had wrongly

Led me to see of affairs a proof.

And then I saw a sight of wings light-smitten

And welcome waving of white, shining

On quivering air above the sun-seeped

And then as though by some mysterious

The warp and woof grew close my gaze be

And darkness felt beyond, with quick de

And stir of hands and wings I saw no more

"Old Sol" is an early riser. It's a cold day when he dont make his powerful rays of heat felt. To protect yourself from his scorching beams is one of the first laws of nature. The ingenuity of man has provided the Parasol. Whether Robinson Crusoe was the first inventor or not, he done more to introduce and popularize the Parasol than any other man.

Our stock this season eclipses all previous exhibits, and we think R. C. himself would find it difficult to secure and select prettier or more natural sticks for handles. But we don't stop there. Silks, satins and laces are all brought into use in the make-up of the Nineteenth Century Parasols. Every manufacturer and merchant vie with each other who will produce or sell the best made, best material, best design at the lowest or best price. We want your decision. We want you to see our stock. The values we offer will quickly convince you that our prices are right, our styles are right, and that perfect workmanship is of value even in a Parasol.

Look at the Black Satin Parasol, lace trimmed, with colored lining and natural wood sticks, we offer at $1.45.

Or the one made up of a better satin, better lace at $1.75.

Then we have them in still finer grades, with rich black satin, heavy silk lace at $2, $3 and $3.75.

Coaching Parasols. What a variety! Plain, all colors, changeable, stripes, checks and pongees, every one a gem, a work of art. Prices range from $1.25 to $5. Rich parasols with fine hand run Spanish lace covers, from $10 to $17.
