THE city of Chippewa Falls, the county seat of Chippewa county, Wisconsin, takes first rank as an exponent of that enterprise, thrift and energy that are so characteristic of the people of the Northwest. It stands out as an attractive example of what man's energy may accomplish when joined with beneficent nature. In this flourishing little city it seems as if the hand of God had been extended more than half-way to meet and aid the hand of man, with the result of a prosperous, generous and hospitable community, ensconced in a picturesque, booming town, reaching out for territory to enclose and conquer. The West-bound traveler, leaving the East he has outgrown, would naturally be attracted by Chippewa Falls, before he had even encountered the open-hearted welcome of its people. The capitalist of the overworked East, looking Westward for the best investment; or the manufacturer, lost for a local market and seeking more promising fields, would never pass Chippewa Falls, after having seen it, without a pleased investigation of what it has to offer in the way of natural resources and developed facilities. Not even though he were borne by on the wings of the railroad, would the traveler fail to observe the rare advantages possessed by Chippewa Falls in all that forecasts the coming metropolis. The city is one of those many towns born in the uncertain period before the civil war, and dwarfed for the time by that great struggle, only rising into life when the attention and energy of its people were permitted to develop themselves in local channels. Its real race for prosperity and supremacy only began within the past five years, and it has now entered upon a career which will end energy and enterprise always end.

LOCATION. Chippewa Falls is most picturesquely located among the hills and bluffs which alternately smile and frown upon the river of the same name. It has occupied its cosy site sufficiently long to have disposed of those unattractive evidences of newness and to have completed what are known as city improvements and have now come to be considered indispensable. The Chippewa, after tumbling riotously down the ledge which gives name to the place, sweepingly bisects the city being augmented by the waters of Duncan's creek, which also divide the north half. The location, with its hills and valleys, is a charming one, and the view commands for ten miles down the lovely valley is superb. Viewed from a residence standpoint, the town is almost faultless in these respects, which has resulted in making it the home of great wealth, houses and residences of which many a larger city might well be proud. In the way of METROPOLITAN FEATURES, Chippewa has advanced wonderfully; its water-works system, gas and electric light plants, public school plant, fire department and sanitary arrangements being second to none. It is well laid out, with broad, slightly streets, large blocks and city improvements evidenced on every side. Sewers permeate the town, under an improved system, and the public health is attested by a mortality rate exceedingly low. The north side of the community is well held up, the bread of life being distributed by nine churches, each of which has erected its own commodious edifice. The social feature of existence is exceedingly prominent; traveling amusements receive liberal patronage, and the passing stranger finds himself comparable with those of any city of its size in the Northwest. Such are the first impressions gained of a little city of the western range, the supplies are all drawn from this city as a distributing point. Chippewa Falls is essentially a lumber city, being headquarters for corporations ranging nearly to $10,000,000. About this great interest has grown up the commercial life necessary to its existence. Banks have sprung up, with the growth of mercantile pursuits, and manufacturers have naturally followed. One line of business has occasioned another, and the two have made a third necessary, until finally, with the lumber trade as a nucleus, has evolved a flourishing municipality, with everything that goes to make a city. When the time comes, in the course of a few years, that the woods are exhausted, the energy of the people will have created other channels and will have exemplified the survival of the fittest.

ITS COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE is due to two potential causes; first, the fact that it is the central point of the great pine country tributary to the Chippewa river, and second, because of the magnificent water power, second to none in the Northwestern country. From its favorable location, Chippewa is the key to the great lumber country, and central depot of supplies and though the minor depots follow the gradual extinction of the trees, the supplies are all drawn from this city as a distributing point. Chippewa Falls is essentially a lumber city, being headquarters for corporations ranging nearly to $10,000,000. About this great interest has grown up the commercial life necessary to its existence. When the time comes, in the course of a few years, that the woods are exhausted, the energy of the people will have created other channels and will have exemplified the survival of the fittest.

THE WATER POWER, which nature has provided, is the second great potential factor in the growth and development of this city, which promises to be of the greatest good to the municipality. The Chippewa Lumber and Boom company, which owns the water rights, has agreed to cut a canal along the south side of the river, thus furnishing abundant sites for manufacturing purposes, with a capacity of at least 10,000-horse power at average water stages. The cost of this improvement will be $150,000, and the city will throw it open to incoming capital by paying 6 per cent interest on the loan to the boom company. A committee of the Business Men's association has it in charge, and on behalf of the city will accept the offer, and the privilege of having the right of way free, the city to make the improvement. The work will certainly or capitalist contemplating changing this base of operation, can ignore without personal inspection. It is a self-evident fact that manufacturers are a necessity to the growth, prosperity and stability of every inland city, and the wants to be supplied in large aggregations of people in the cities and country tributary thereto are almost innumerable. The necessity of furnishing profitable and steady employment to the surplus population with dependent families is paramount. Hence, no city, however great her general commercial advantages, can expect to attain true greatness, independence and a commanding influence, which needs to encourage and foster in all legitimate ways this prime factor of development. So clearly are these truths recognized, especially in the great Northwest, that competition between ambitious survival localities is active, sharp and strong. The problem of the supremacy of this or that commercial center, then, resolves itself into this proposition: Given the greatest combination of natural advantages joined to the most intelligent, sagacious, enterprising and public-spirited population, the issue can never be doubtful. When nature and man combine their best powers they are invincible. But neither nature alone nor man alone can conquer. It is only when both are united that the race is won. Thus we find that Chippewa Falls stands relatively in this position. Nature has been munificent with her gifts, and the wide-awake citizens of the city have wisely resolved to utilize them to their advantage. She has a number of important manufacturing plants, and the wide-awake citizens of the city have wisely resolved to utilize them to their advantage. A GIANT INDUSTRY. The Chippewa Lumber and Boom Company's Plant.

The term "soulless corporation" has been applied to nearly all corporate bodies possessing an extended power or influence, but quite as often is the epithet in contradiction of it, and among the many noticeable exceptions is the Chippewa Lumber and Boom company, of this city, although it is one of the largest and wealthiest incorporated organizations in the Northwest. It is the only organized lumber company of Wisconsin, and is personally identified with the city. They own the entire present water power of the Chippewa river from the dam at Paint creek to the dam at Paint creek, one and one-half miles above, and the largest, most complete and perfect saw mill in the world, with a season's capacity of 50,000,000 feet or 300,000 feet in eleven hours, and 100,000 lath and 100,000 shingles. The mill has a main building 112x165 feet, 3 stories, with a wing 32x32 and extensive platforms covering an area of several acres, besides several other adjuncts. The machinery consists of 2 Wickes gangs, 2 Allen bands mills, 2 Allis rollers, 4 edgers, 4 trimmers, 4 gang slab-shedders, 3 lath and 2 shingle mills, all of which are run by three large American turbine water wheels, affording a

No Wisconsin City Can Show Such a Union of Facilities With Energy.

NO CITY in Wisconsin can present so many diversified advantages or inducements for the establishment and maintenance of manufacturing plants as this city. With unsurpassed water power, inexhaustible quantities of hard and soft wood timber, admirable railroad facilities and the advantages offered upon the completion of the new canal, the city of Chippewa Falls presents attractions that no manufacturer of capitalist contemplating changing this base of operation, can ignore without personal inspection. It is a self-evident fact that manufacturers are a necessity to the growth, prosperity and stability of every inland city, and the wants to be supplied in large aggregations of people in the cities and country tributary thereto are almost innumerable. combined power of 1,500 horse power. The water is fed through a sluice way several hundred feet in length, from the dam above. Electric lights are in all parts of the building and every modern appliance is provided for economizing and facilitating the work. The lumber is taken from the mill, loaded on narrow-gauge cars, drawn by a locomotive to the yards a mile above and piled, the company owning the entire plant. At the yards is a large planing mill for dressing the lumber when required, with sufficient capacity to meet all demands. Above the mill is a dam extending across the river which was rebuilt by the company in 1871, and furnishes a developed head of 33 feet, equivalent to 8,000 horse power. A fire destroyed the mill in the fall of 1886, but it was immediately rebuilt more perfect than ever. There are constantly employed in the mill and yards some 400 hands during the cutting season, and in the woods logging during the winter months. The officers of the company are: F. Weyerhaeuser, president; O. H. Ingram, vice president, and William Irvine, manager.

THE SPRING BREWERY. The Most Complete Establishment in Northern Wisconsin.

No stranger visiting Chippewa Falls ought to depart before inspecting the Spring Brewery, owned by Jacob Leinenkugel. In size, capacity, completeness of detail, quality of goods, and the general picturesque appearance, the surrounding landscape is equal to any in the Northwest. The brewery buildings, ice houses and adjuncts are of stone, and occupy a ground space of 60x300 feet, all of which was formerly a bold bluff. The buildings consist of a malt-house, 80x130 feet, three stories high; a cooling room and wash house, 40x75 feet, with a capacity of 5,000 barrels; a large ice house and storing cellars, one of which is 35x65 feet, 44 feet high, of stone, with an ice capacity of 1,000 tons. The storing capacity of 5,000 barrels of beer, another one is 44x80 feet, two stories high, capable of containing 2,000 tons of ice and a storing capacity of 5,000 barrels of beer. The engine room is a fifty-horse power engine and 150-horse power boiler, a Knowles boiler pump, a large stand pump for water, with a capacity of throwing 100 feet of water, and a large air pump for forcing the beer from the large vats in the cellars to the filling room. The malt cellars are two in number, with an aggregate floor space of 8,000 square feet, with a capacity of 100,000 bushels of malt. SEYMOUR'S BANK. In point of seniority Seymour's stands first, having been established in 1870 by D. E. Seymour, who is still its president, with W. L. Seymour, cashier. The bank has the most confidence of the public, for Mr. Seymour, Sr., is a gentleman of great integrity and unimpeachable character, who has for many years been identified with the lumber, pine and agricultural interests of his country. He is broad-gauged and liberal in all things, yet conservative and calculating, while his name is synonymous with all that is honorable. The increasing business of the bank is largely due to the personal attention of W. L. Seymour, cashier, who has a large following of personal friends. The deposit account is large, and the capital of $20,000 is annually augmented by its earnings and surpluses.

One of the most popular county officials is T. B. Leonard, the county clerk, who has occupied his present position since January, 1887, prior to which time he was deputy postmaster for five years. He has been a resident of the county for the past ten years; is a Democrat in politics, and received 900 majority for the position he now holds. Next fall Mr. Leonard will be a candidate for reelection, and there is no question as to the result, for a more worthy and capable person could not be found.

HON. GEORGE C. GINTY, A Prominent Citizen and Politician of Wisconsin.

Hon. George C. Ginty, editor of the Chippewa Herald, is well-known throughout Wisconsin in the field of politics, literature and the social circle. He is a native of Canada and a practical newspaper man, having followed the profession of journalism for the past twenty-five years. He has occupied various positions of trust, such as member of assembly, state senator, city alderman and has been president of the board of education for several years. His army record shows that he entered the service as major of the Thirty-ninth Wisconsin, subsequently being promoted colonel of the Forty-seventh Wisconsin, and again brevetted brigadier general. His name is prominently associated with that of Governor of his state at the next Republican nominating convention, and if he should secure the nomination he will fill the gubernatorial chair with credit to his constituents and himself.

T. J. CUNNINGHAM, The Only Democratic Editor in Chippewa County.

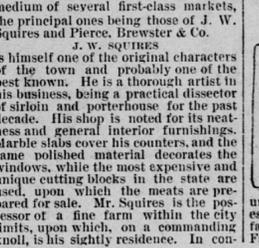

T. J. Cunningham, editor and proprietor of the Chippewa Times, is favorably known throughout the commonwealth of Wisconsin as a popular Democrat, a deserving citizen and an influential factor in his county and state politics. He is a practical newspaper man, with ideas of progressiveness and originality. For three years he has identified with the Madison Daily Democrat, and one

GEN. H. W. EARLEY, One of the Prominent and Influential Men.

One of the most conspicuous and well known men in Northern Wisconsin is Gen. Earley, and one prominently identified with the growth and prosperity of Chippewa Falls and the county. General Earley is a native of New York state, and was first brought to this country in 1851, and subsequently receiving a good common school education, and at twenty-one years of age began his struggles with life as a lumberman, an occupation he has successfully followed ever since. For many years he was identified with the manufacturing interests on the Genesee river in New York, and later at Williamsport, Pa., but foreseeing the rapid extinguishment of the forests in that section began to give his attention to the great and practically unknown Northwest, where stood unsurveyed millions of valuable pine in all its prime grandeur, awaiting the coming of civilization to utilize. In 1857 Gen. Earley began purchasing large tracts of Wisconsin pine lands, but did not become a citizen of the state until 1882, when he removed his family to Chippewa Falls, and from the date he has been a leading factor in the extensive lumbering and logging interests that have been so potent in the development of this section of the Northwest. Wisconsin in general, and of Chippewa Falls and county in particular. He has been identified also in some of the largest sales of logs every recorded in the history of Wisconsin pine, and millions of feet of pine to him is synonymous with millions of dollars with Vanderbilt or Goussier. One chief characteristic of Gen.
