That is a quaint feature of banking the lower house of congress has adoptdisbursing clerk in the sergeant-atarms' office is enabled to walk off with | journey to the world's fair. $80,000 of the salaries belonging to conressmen. An effort will be made by the losing members to hold the government responsible for the loss, but we fail to see where the responsibility comes in. There is no warrant in the law for such a banking system as the sergeant-at-arms has established. The rules of the house permit it simply for the convenience of members, and yet it is an abominable method that ought not to be tolerated. The law provides for the payment of salaries out of the federal treasury, just as all other claims against the government are paid, and when the money leaves the treasury vault in payment of the made upon it that ends the government's responsibility. The practice has been, however, for the sergeant-at-arms to open a bank account with each member and attache of the house, and all the disbursements are made through his office. He draws his draft on the treasury in favor of such a member in payment of his salary for the current month, the member indorses the draft, and then that amount is placed to his credit in the unauthorized congressional bank, and the member checks it out to suit his convenience. It was also made a depository for all the surplus funds that members had about them when they reached Washington, and it was in this way one of the South Dakota senators was caught in the snap. While the establishment was a convenience in one sense to the members, it was also subjected to gross abuses. Members whose necessities outran their funds often drew on the sergeant-at-arms in advance of their salary, and these advance drafts were usually discounted in the regular way nd at the regular rates adopted by legitimate banking institutions. There is no telling how many overdrawn accounts are now on the books of the concern against insolvent congressmen. It was under the pretext of going to New York to collect an arrearage of $12,000 from a man who had been out of congress for several years that SIL-COTT found an opportunity to skip to Canada with his swag. It occurs to us that the house might profitably go into an investigation of the sergeant-at-arms banking establishment, and devise some way of accommodating the members in the matter of salary payments without jeopardizing the little stuff they have to their credit. AN AUDITORIUM.

The sounds of rejoicing which are wafted from Chicago over the completion of the great Auditorium building are sad reminders to us that we haven't even the apology for such a structure. We congratulate our Chicago friends upon their great enterprise, which was worthy of all the ceremonies attending its opening. It was not beneath the dignity of the president of the United States and of the members of the cabinet to honor the occasion with their presence, and it was appropriate to the purposes to which the building is dedicated that the immortal PATTI should add her tribute of melody. What a pleasing prospect it would be for us add her tribute of melody. What a pleasing prospect it would be for us here in St. Paul if we could look for ward to something of the kind in the near future; and yet what a mortifying spectacle it is to look around and see nothing, nor the shadow of anything, resembling a public hall worthy the name of a hall or auditorium. And yet there is nothing in the way of a public improvement that the city needs more. Has the spirit of enterprise fled from our midst, or is it only awaiting the touch of some hand that it is too modest to stretch itself forth, to be awakened into activity? There had to be a beginning with the Chicago auditorium and there were those who lacked faith in its success. But the believing ones laid hold of the work, and they are to-day enjoying the reward of their labor. Isn't there encouragement in this for the enterprising citizens of this city, who have never heretofore failed to respond to the call of public duty?

THE SISSETON TREATY.

Our news from the Sisseton agency this morning is of the most gratifying character. A sufficient number of the Indians signed the treaty yesterday afternoon to secure the opening of the valuable tract of land included in that reservation. Not the least gratifying part of this treaty is that it secures to the Sissetons immediate payment of an old claim that has long and unjustly been withheld from them. The price paid for the land, $5 per acre, is low enough, considering the quality of the soil and its general topographical advantages; and yet it will aggregate a sum sufficient for all the purposes to which it is to be devoted. The Sisseton tribe merited special favor at the hands of the government because of their valuable services to the government during the great Sioux outbreak. Old Chief RENVILLE is a man of remarkable ability and force of character, and his influence has always been exerted for good. If every tribe were blessed with such a chieftain, the Indian problem would soon solve itself.

AT A recent gathering of ladies the uestion of the desirability of the higher and collegiate education for girls was raised. Some insisted that the languages and the studies that developed the mind were not so conducive to matrimony as the polite acomplishments, the social veneer. The decision seemed in doubt until statistics were produced showing that young ladies who received the collegiate or higher training almost as a rule were married soon after completing their education. That made the conclusion unanimous. There is a constant increase of numbers in the higher walks of female learning.

THE mint is unable to keep up with the demand for small coins, and especially one-cent pieces. Several theories are adduced as the cause of this demand. It is reported that contribu-tion boxes at church furnish a partial solution. One was noted on Sunday that had seventy-five or more nickels and cent pieces, and not a single larger coin, although the contributors looked like prosperous men and women. Then the holidays are at hand. The diamond dealers may have their largest trade in glass and paste.

A PURVEYOR in meats in the East has had the theory that horse meat was palatable and as good as other animal food. The prejudice against it he regarded as a matter of sentiment, and not reason. He experimented with it in his sausages, and not one of his customers suspected the fact. It is probable that would have found the demand the same had there been an infusion of dogs and cats. There is, perhaps, no more sublime exhibition of faith than is found about cheap tables.

MODELED AFTER CANADA. The Proposed Federation of the Australian Colonies.

SYDNEY, Dec. 10 .- Sir Henry Parkes, the premier and colonial secretary, is following up his proposition for a federation of the Australian colonies, som what as he suggested, upon the model of the Dominion of Canada. This scheme grew directly out of the proposition for the formation of an Australian army, the formation of an Australian army, but it aims especially to overcome many gross evils of misgovernment which seem inseparable from the present system, and while it has many other supporters than Sir Henry himself, there is a conservative element which apprehends that if once the colorists take to organizing a general onists take to organizing a general colonial government, they may not lie but put into effect their desire to emulate the giant steps of the United States. Sir Henry, in elaboration of his project, suggests the abolition of all order duties and absolute free trade between the colonies, guaranteed, if necessary, by special intercolonial treaties; a uniform marriage law to protect the family from the evils of di-vorce as seen in the United States, and a uniform railway gauge for the whole country. DEPOSITION OF DOM PEDRO, Details of the Successful Revolution in Brazil.

LONDON, Dec. 11 .- The Times prints letter from Rio Janeiro, under date of Nov. 21, giving further details of the revolution in Brazil. When the army leaders learned that the imperial authorities intended to disperse the thorities intended to disperse the troops at Rio they resolved to resist the point of deposing the ministry. The Republicans seized the advantage thus offered them and worked hard for a fortnight, maintaining the utmost secrecy regarding their plans. In some way the government got wind of what was going on and resolved to send the Seventh infantry away on the 15th instead of the 20th, as had been intended. The cabinet met late at night intended. The cabinet met late at night on the 14th. At daybreak on the 15th the ministers of the navy, foreign affairs and justice and the prime minister were all at the arsenal to witness the landing of the naval battalion which had en ordered to mount guard in the barracks in Acclamation square, where the troops were quartered. At 6:30, as the marine arrived, the whole cabinet met at the war office, and three infantry battalions were formed before the ex-

Later several regiments of cavalry and the whole police force joined. At 8:15 a. m., when the cabinet considered that there was a sufficient force at their command to compel the recalcitrant battalion to march, Gen. Da Fonseca appeared on the scene and all of the officials inside and outside the barracks received him with acclamations and cries of "Down with the ministry." Baron Ladario, the minister of marine, on coming from the arsenal, was invited to surrender as the prisoner of Marshal da Fonseca and the army. It was at this moment that the shooting scene already described occurred. Gen. da Fonseca then entered the barracks and informed the ministers that they were deposed. At the general request of their comrades he released them; but, on learning in the evening that the premier had had an interview with the premier had had an interview with the emperor, he rearrested the premier. As soon as the news spread every commercial house closed its doors in terror. It is said that Gen. De Fonseca was simply carried away, as the deposition of the government alone cost him dear, and that he resolved at the last moment to cast his lot with the Republicans. Pigott's Friend Passes Away.

ONLY A BONE, But the Police Thought It Was a Cronin Mystery.

There was plenty of excitement in police circles early last evening. Some one telephoned to headquarters that a body of a man had been found in a hay loft at 730 Fourth avenue south. All sorts of rumors were at once started. Capt. Dan Day, of the central station, was notified, and he started down to make an investigation. Fred George, the police clerk, who locks up his desk the minute a reporter enters his office, for once had some information to give out. He looked very wise as one of the newspaper men inquired, "anything new to-day, Fred?" The scribe expected the usual stereotyped "no" from the clerk, and could hardly believe his ears when George looked very wise and striving to appear unconcerned, replied: "Yes, there's plenty of news to-day. There's been a murder down at 730 Fourth avenue south, and the officers have gone down. See Kellog, I'm busy." Signal Officer Kellog laughed and said: "Some one telephoned that the body of a man had been found down on Fourth avenue in a sorts of rumors were at once started. found down on Fourth avenue in a barn, and the police have gone down, but I don't know anything about it. Several reporters made a grand rush for the vicinity only to find that a small piece of the forearm of a skeleton which a medical student had left in a barn in the rear of 720 Fourth avenue South, the finding of which a year ago caused no excitement, had been discovered. When the skeleton was removed by the coroner this piece of bone was overlooked. The good people of the neighborhood were considerably amused at the excitement the important discovery created.

THE BAVARIAN MURDERER. He Calmly Awaits the Arrival of Brackett to hold Schieber, and that he has cabled the Bavarian authorities notifying them of the arrest. It is prob able that the necessary extradition papers will be sent to Minneapolis at once. Yesterday he submitted to be-ing measured for the criminal register. As to the murder of the old man, a native of Bulgaria, who has had a con-ference with Schieber, says that there are mitigating circumstances behind the murder. He says that the old man and Schieber's wife had been crimi-nally intimate, and that he had for a long time suspected his wife's infidelity before he killed the old man. The pris-oner thinks that these facts, which he says he can produce witnesses to prove says he can produce witnesses to prove, will be sufficient in his country to clear him of the charge of murder.

THOSE FIRE ESCAPES. some of Them Will be Ordered

This Week. The building inspector's office has been the target for considerable unfavorable comment since the Tribune fire. The law distinctly places the matter of ordering fire escapes in the hands of the building inspector, and many people are of the opinion that work in that direction has not been pushed as rapidly as it should have been. The inspectors, however, who have charge of the work have been busy for a week examining buildings and locating escapes. About twenty fire escapes have already been ordered upon buildings which were not supplied, and seventy-three more orders will be issued before Saturday. The inspectors say that work in this direction is being pushed as rapidly as possible, but com-plain that quite a number of well-known citizens object to placing the fire es-capes when ordered.

One of a Party of Gay Roysterers Sues the City for Damages.

F. W. Schonwalder has sued the city of Minneapolis and Ring & Tobin, contractors, for $5,000 and his case was on trial yesterday before Judge Hooker. He alleges damages sustained by him on University avenue by driving into a partially con-structed sewer. There was a good structed sewer. There was a good deal of racy testimony submitted. Schonwalder admitted that he, with seven others, had taken eight soiled doves from First street south, and with them had gone to St. Paul. It was on the return trip that the accident occurred. The plea of the defense was that all members of the party were drunk, and that the injuries received were due to their own perligence. All were due to their own negligence. All the evidence was taken and Judge Hooker took the matter under advise-as not yet recovered from its old habit disagreeing with the state inspector fluminating oils. Under the old law there were squabbles innumerable over the proper inspection of oil, and since the law was changed at the last since the law was changed at the last session of the legislature, the trouble seems not to have been mended so far as this company is concerned. The old law was somewhat ambiguous, but such cannot be urged concerning the new one. The Northwestern Star Oil com-pany has filed two petitions, asking that C. W. Lane, deputy oil inspector, be compelled to inspect certain oils, in a manner which he claims is directly opposed to the terms of the law. The first petition recites that Lane refused to inspect two barrels of oil which were trawn from a railroad tank car in his presence. The law provides, according to the inspector's interpretation, that oil shall not be unloaded from railway tanks until inspected. The second petition relates that on the same day Lane refused to inspect a railroad tank car of oil when tendered 40 cents as fee nane refused to hispect a railroad tank car of oil when tendered 40 cents as fee therefor. On this point the law says that when there are more than fifty gallons in a tank each fifty gallons shall constitute a barrel, and that the fee for inspecting it shall be the same for every fifty gallous as prescribed by law for each package or barrel.
