CHRISTMAS GIFTS. With the approach of the Christmas season the shopping season is full of bustle.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. Everybody is buying, and if they are not buying they are invading the stores and ransacking the holiday display just as if their lives depended on it.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. A stranger visiting this section, one who came from a region where the American idea of Christmas did not prevail, would naturally wonder what sort of a craze had struck the people as they go in flocks, hurrying hither and thither up and down the streets, in and out of the stores, a restless tide of humanity, sweeping along without direction, and apparently without an intelligent purpose in view.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. This is the way it would strike one unaccustomed to our American methods. But to those of us who are familiar with these approaching holidays, there is nothing in this restlessness, nay, more, there is the sweetest sentiment underlying this moving mass of humanity. It is all the prompting of that divine trait in human nature which makes all the world kin. It is the one gracious season in all the year when we are inspired with the belief that it is more blessed to give than to receive, for it is the season that brings to mind that unrequited and that sublimest emotion of uninterested friendship which the Holy One abandoned the charity of paradise for an existence of privation, suffering and death in order that others might be made happy.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. While the sentiment that furnishes the motive for an American style of celebrating Christmas is so noble, it appears strongly to our better nature, yet we must say, in all candor, that, like everything else of the American type, it is being grievously overdone. There is a great deal of misdirected energy and judgment in our nation, and in many instances a fearful miscarriage of friendship. In too many cases we buy the things that ought not to be bought, and we give the things that ought not to be given. They fall of their own weight, because the gifts are not of the heart, but to be appreciated. It is undeniable that there is a vulgar tendency in our American custom of Christmas observance of making costly presents without regard to the appropriateness of the gift. This is wrong, and we propose to submit a few reasons for thinking so.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. A person of good breeding will accept the slightest token of personal friendship with as much cordiality as if it were an expensive present. There is more in the act than in the gift, so that costly gifts are as useless as they are in bad taste.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. There is a special reason, just at this time, for retrenchment in the matter of making Christmas presents. The times are hard and money matters are tight, and all forms of extravagance are deprecated. It is neither rational nor just to spend money for toys and gewgaws when that money is needed to supply the necessities of life. More than this is the dishonesty to be buying the costly presents for your friends while your grocery bills and your butcher bills are unpaid, or your house rent is in arrears.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. Buying costly gifts does not accord with either the spirit or the teachings of Christianity. The atheist and the agnostic believer may celebrate the holiday season according to his individual notion, for with him there is nothing like sanctity attached to the occasion. But the churchman celebrates it, or is supposed to celebrate it, in a different spirit.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS. With the professed Christian the season is one of profound historical importance. In his is his convictions, the he will want to celebrate the occasion just as Christ would celebrate it if He were still on earth. What think you of the poet's favorite text to the pilgrims to-day? What would you think of Him, and what would the world think of Him, if on his birthday he had gone around Jerusalem distributing diamond jewelry and costly velvets among the people, while the cripple who unaided the poor the morning of the resurrection, and the waters and His ears were deaf to the clamors of the hungry multitude who starved on the mountain side.

The poor are always with us. They are here in St. Paul; just as needy, too, as they were in Jerusalem. Was Christ unkind as to the spirit of His mission when He sacrificed His own comfort and divested Himself of all selfish considerations? Or is it the churchman of to-day who is mistaken when he lavishes his wealth upon himself and his friends and leaves the poor and the suffering to their fate? We leave the question with you.

the betterment of the numerical data from which the astronomer predicts the position of the moon, and it is thus a matter of moment in the future of navigation, as well as in the further improvement of astronomical tables and theories of the motion of the moon.

Some data that will aid in the investigations of the problems as to the physical constitution of the sun are anticipated. The same authority says that the corona and hydrogen prominences are now thought to be "down rushes of relatively cool material upon the surface of the sun," instead of the exhalations of a heated body, as formerly supposed.

These phenomena are believed to have some relation to the spots on the sun, which may perhaps exercise an influence upon terrestrial conditions. Reports of the observations will be waited for with interest by scientific circles.
