Hawks—Not to have more than three exciting runaways in the same week. W. H. Yardley—To get his name in the papers and stop talking about "my clients." Howard Estes—Not to give a minus force a chance to dally with his whiskers. Col. Bobleter—To make another "find" in the closet of the treasury department. "Squire" W. H. R. McMartin—To swear off kissing brides and demand the regulation fees. "Squire" Fred Nelson—To preserve the dignity of the court, even if it costs him a re-election. Jim Doran—To quit wearing diamonds and say something to the boys occasionally. Stanley Prondit—To keep on trying to raise something for the wind to whistle through. W. R. Gitt—To breakfast a little earlier and invest in an outfit to tone down a high complexion. Commissioner Boyd—To get another snap for his brother-in-law when the present one peters out. Pat Egan—To get a chance to superintend something—the city stables if nothing else shows up. John W. Townley—To change that pathetically mournful countenance while telling his best story. Sam Lowenstein—To drink two quarts of the real article every day when he starts in on his government job. Don Patricio Kavanach—Not to make nine-tenths of the motions and do more than three-fourths of the voting at the meetings of the council.

WHERE CUPID LURKS.

The Mecca of Loving Hearts Is the County Clerk's Office.

In the License Room Is Where Cupid and Hymen Come Together.

Peculiar Scenes that Occur Upon Application for License.

Sketches from the Court House Where the Act Is Wrought.

ITH nothing on but a halo, a pair of gaudy wings and a frog's smile, Cupid, Hymen's youthful partner, was wandering through the labyrinth of a hall-passer, taking aim with unerring certainty at each loveless heart—bringing to the scene a new interest in things of earth through the medium of "two pretty brown eyes."

"I have filtered you a knowledge hitherto unsuspected of the existence of 'other hearts and other hands' to the widow and the widower an admonition that they had better take care of their garments before, and shuffle the pack for a new deal. If the plump little marksman, who is responsible for all the marriages that have come on in the past few weeks, could have spent half a day in the office of the clerk, he would have been a different man during that period, he might have gained a few pointers calculated to aid him very materially in the selection of future victims. He plays some queer pranks does this gay young god. It is at his bidding that couples no less than those of the most distinguished families are wedded to maids of fourteen; that the fairest skinned Caucasian weds the blackest Ethiopian; and thereby commits some unpardonable crime against posterity. It is a very interesting spot this license counter in the clerk's office. The different modes of procedure toward getting licenses on the part of the fellows who want to get married are about all familiar to the astute young man with the blue locks and a face like Onda's "Serap." who dispenses the valuable "slips of paper" to couples in this way. All day long he is besieged by persons who insist on being married, and day after day he is obliged to explain to the tearful would-be matrons and bridegrooms the provisions of the law in the matter of issuing certificates. Every time a man walks into that office in an uncertain sort of way, turns around a couple of times and starts out a little the better of it, many persons apparently feeling that it is good to enter upon a new life with the new year.

There is always a great rush for licenses a day or two before Easter, the Fourth of July, Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's, but the latter has a little the best of it, many persons apparently feeling that it is good to enter upon a new life with the new year.

The old adage that "wrens are superstitious" is strikingly illustrated in the marriage license office. Very rarely is a license taken out on that ill-omened day—Friday.

There is a peculiar thing about people who are about to get married; that is most of them do not know their names published in the daily list. The reason they give are various. One man works in a mill, and he doesn't want his fellow-workmen to plague him. Another man has a grown-up daughter, and she might make things unpleasant. A woman did not want her first husband's family to know she was remarried, and so the reason multiply.

Making false statements to the marriage license clerk for the purpose of obtaining a license constitutes perjury, and is severely punished.

AFTER THE APRICOT.

A Fat City Office to Be Given Out on Next Tuesday Night.

The Building Inspectorship Proves a Tempting Bait to Many.

A Juicy Plum, With Short Hours and Big Pay, Ready to Drop.

Candidates Are as Thick as Leaves in the Vallambrosa.

The local political situation is always interesting. Two weeks ago the absorbing topic of conversation was the coming spring election, but since that time the bright prospects of spring-time turbulence have been eclipsed and the city is again in the grip of some of the most profitable of the year.

The clerk picks up a blank in a cold, prosaic manner, and the girl wonders if he realizes that "John and I are to be married." The clerk asks the usual questions. The lady is usually ready for his answers, although she protests with her eyes at the importunities of the law, and often prompts the bridegroom when he forgets whether he was sworn in the United States or in Asia Minor. Then they have to sign the record. The lady generally takes off her gloves, and thereby shows her engagement ring. After affixing her signature she looks at it critically, apparently wondering whether she will like her new name better, and if it will take her long to learn to write it. Both hold up their right hands while they are sworn to their statements. There is half a dollar put in the precious paper in his breast pocket, and the couple depart. Ten to one, before the clerk's door closes you hear his pressed giggle and an injunction to John not to lose the license.

More than one happy groom has had to leave his bride in the office while he went out to skimp for the fee. A peculiar thing about people who are about to get married is that most of them do not know their names published in the daily list. The reason they give are various. One man works in a mill, and he doesn't want his fellow-workmen to plague him. Another man has a grown-up daughter, and she might make things unpleasant.
