not only un-American and un-repub-

Thackeray told with glee how he walked into the parlor after the placid Horace, and how the journalist tried to assure a pleasant welcome by greeting his better half with an effusive smile. He had no sooner dropped his hat on the center table than she picked it up and threw it out of the window, thus mildly expressing her disgust. Having eased her mind, she saluted the distinguished guest with becoming gravity, and all was well.

Lincoln and Those who knew Lincoln best knew that the Comet. he could take as well as give in the matter of a joke. In the spring of 1849 he left Springfield, Ill., for Washington by stage, to accept the commissionership of the general land office. In the stage were Thomas H. Nelson, of Terre Haute, afterwards minister to Chili, and Abram Hammon I, afterward governor of Indiana. They found Lincoln asleep, alone, with his long, lank form stretched across all the seats. After a slap on the back, he sat up, and they inventoried an individual dressed in a worn and ill-fitting suit of bombazine, without vest or cravat, and a palmeter hat on the back of this boad. Here they inventoried an individual dressed in a worn and ill-fitting suit of bombazine, without vest or cravat, and a palmleaf hat on the back of his head. Here was a subject, and the Lair proceeded to perpetrate several jokes. Lincoln took them with the utmost innocence and good nature and joined in the laugh, although at his own expense. When they stopped for dinner the conversation turned on the new comet of that year, and at the table, with the 25-cent palm leaf under his arm, Lincoln asked: "What is going to be the upshot of this comet business?" Nelson replied that he was inclined to the opinion that the world would "follow the darned thing off." The three did not meet again for years; not until Lincoln arrived in Indianapolis on his way to Washington to be inauguarated president. As they approached the door of the office in the hotel, a long arm reached out and a shrill voice exclaimed: "Heilo, Nelson! Do you think, after all, the world is going to follow the darned thing off?"

Fitz-Greene Washington, a great-grandnephew of the Father of His Country, has an account of the affair from his grandfather, Capt. Fitz Hughes. The captain learned after the start where the fighting ground had been located, and was rowed across the North river by a couple of slaves. When he arrived the antagonists had taken positions. Hamilton and Burr were to fire twice or thrice. At the word of command Hamilton fired at Burr, and Burr fired in the air. At the second firing Hamilton fired in the air, and Burr shot Hamilton. Homilton thought Burr Hamilton. Homilton thought Burr meant to kill him, as he meant to kill him, as he meant to kill Burr, but when he saw the discharge in the air he changed his tactics, as did Burr, and with fatal results. This is said to be the true history of the duel fought by these two great men.

What Washburn Represents.

To the Editor of the Globe.

In the GLOBE of the S1st it is stated In the GLOBE of the 31st it is stated "Washburn represents nothing in the United States senate but himself and Minneapolis." Are you not mistaken? If common report is correct he represents the very worst type of American politics. He represents boodleism and the spot cash principle which seems to have taken possession of the g. o. p. in Minnesota. He represents the long list of scrambling officeseekers (from this state) who intest every nook and corner and all the avenues of approach to the White house. While our senior senator is wrestling with the great questions before congress and is discharging his duties as a statesman, Washburn is sneaking around in search of the loaves and the fishes. He has introduced no bills, has made no speeches and never will. It would be better for our state if he only represented himself and Minneapolis, but alas! He represents machine politics and all that is vile and odious therein.

among the Tory and Unionist Orangemen of Ulster, which threatens to assume serious proportions and endanger the continued solidity of the ministerial representation for Ulster in the house of commons. The trouble is not of recent origin, but lately many things have come up to hasten the inevitable culmination of the ill-feeling in an open rupture. Thomas W. Russell, the Liberal Unionist member for South Tyrone, has repeatedly given evidence of his independence of party dictation where the policy of the government or the trend of party interest ran counter to his convictions, and the attempts of his colleagues to call him to account and whip him into line have uniformly been unsuccessful. In a recent speech, Mr. Russell remarked the servility of the Ulster men in blindly following their political masters to the prejudice of their own interests, roundly denounced them as blockheads, and characterized the Ulster commoners as a party of deadheads and characterized the description. representation for Ulster in the house to have lectured to-night at the Madison Street theater, was taken seriously ill upon his arrival today from Des Moines, and, by the advice of a physician, left for New York at 5:30 p. m. Upon his arrival at the Windsor hotel Dr. McGlynn sent for a physician, and Dr. Milton Jay was called in. Dr. Jay found his patient in a high state of fever, and suffering from a severe attack of bronchial troubles. Dr. McGlynn was willing to keep his appointment if the physician would afford him temporary relief, but Dr. Jay positively refused to do anything ef the kind and warned his patient of the dangerous character of his ailment, which, at the slightest aggravation, might turn into pneumonia. A number of prominent members of the Single Tax club procured and fitted up a section in a through sleeper of the Lake Shore road for the sufferer's comfort, and after a sojourn of only three hours the lecturer left for them as blockheads, and characterized the Ulster commoners as a party of deadheads on the Conservative train. These strictures aroused the ire of Sir Charles E. Lewis (Conservative) member for North Antrim, who has retorted in terms anything but complimentary to the fearless member for Tyrone. As Sir Charles wears the collar of Maj. Saunders, the leader of the Orange party in parliament, his arraignment of Russell may be recorded as an authorized party measure. Russell has many friends, and the quarret may end in a split, of which the Nationalists will not be slow to take advantage.

He advises them that in the selection of enumerators political affiliations are not to be regarded, but men are to be selected for their fitness alone. Preference is, however, to be given to honorably discharged soldiers and sallors residing in their respective districts. He directs that the division into enumeration districts should be made by rural divisions, and that the boundary line be made clear and unmistakable. In agricultural regions Supt. Porter states 2,000 or 2,500 inhabitants may safely be included in an enumeration district. As settlements become more sparse a smaller number should be included. The same limit in the number of inhabitants in an enumeration district should be observed in cities having over 10,000 inhabitants. In the opinion of Supt. Porter, the more quickly the census is taken, the better it will be taken, and so where two equally good enumerators are to be appointed who will complete the canvass in two weeks, he advises that it is better to divide the work between two than to have one enumerator at work for a month. The township assessors and other local officers, postmasters at small offices, county physicians and school teachers are regarded by Mr. Porter as likely to prove competent. Mr. Porter adds that he is aware of no law making women ineligible for appointment as enumerators.
