A Brilliant Social Event at the State Capitol Last Evening.

White Bear Marks a Pleasant Lake Side Scene at the Pavilion.

Yesterday's Run of Events Occurring in and About St. Paul.

Never since its opening has the capitol presented an appearance so brilliant as that given it last evening by the presence within its doors of the 8,000 or more visitors who thronged the corridors and departments throughout the building. They represented every state in the Union. Handsome Southern maidens, radiant in the brilliance of the lights which gleamed everywhere, promenade the tiled passages, escorted by the young men of the court. The fact that the capitol is not a museum, but a place of business, is not necessary to mention, although presumptively the language of the latter certificate would imply that all six tracts had been sold together for a gross sum.

Frederick H. Hudson, appellant, vs. The Minneapolis, Lyndale & Minnetonka Railway Company, respondent. Order affirmed.

Syllabus: Held, that upon the facts in this case the instruction given by the court to the jury, in the absence of plaintiff and his counsel, was not a privy communication, but an instruction in open court and in the regular form of judicial proceedings. The trial is not concluded until a verdict has been rendered or the jury discharged. It is the duty of parties and counsel to remain in or be represented at the court during its session until the trial is ended, and it is not part of the duty of the court to discharge the jury or counsel who have absented themselves from the court room before the trial is ended. The court will not grant a jury return into court for further instructions. It is customary to send for counsel and to wait a reasonable time for their arrival, and it is desirable that this be done when practicable; but this is the matter of courtesy and not of right.

The Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company, appellants, vs. R. B. Langdon, respondent. The Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company, appellants, vs. Thomas Lowry, respondent. Order affirmed.

Syllabus: Upon an adjudication of the insolvency of a corporation and the appointment of a receiver of its property and effects under the provisions of the General Statutes, chapter 70, the right to recover capital withdrawn and retained by the corporation to the credit of its creditors, without provision for the payment of corporate debts, passes to the receiver as the representative of all the creditors, and the right of the creditors in their own behalf to maintain such an action under General Statutes, chapter 70, is not suspended during the pendency of the proceedings under chapter 70. An order of the court directing the receiver to pay to the creditors the amount of "all the assets, property and business" of the insolvent corporation only authorizes the sale of such property as belongs to the corporation, or the effect of the action which might be enforced, in its own right, and not closes in action which the receiver might have maintained only in the right of creditors, as for example capital withdrawn and retained by the corporation to the credit of its creditors, and the right of the holders of such payment of the corporate debts. Gilliland, C. J., and Vanderburgh, J., did not sit.

Al Farrow's Burst of Speed Astonishes the Plungers at Chicago.

The first meeting of the Minnesota Driving club came to a conclusion yesterday, and it must be said, to an unsuccessful conclusion. While the races were fair, the management was so decidedly faulty that the board will probably have a session to locate the blame. There was an amateurishness about the arrangements that excited general comment, and may have been responsible for the financial losses the club will have to sustain.

Mrs. Farrow, who, to the credit of her sex, is the public has lost interest in harness races of all kinds, and care little for the moutinous heats that make a race in a terminable and keep people until 7:30 o'clock to locate the winners.
