Summer Doings of Social People.

Whither to places new, Suburban, by the sea or breezy bay, All on thy summer style dost thou pursue Thy solitary way?

Seekest thou the shady brink
Of pretty lake, or edge of river wide,
Or where the naughty billows rise and sink
By the giddy ocean side?

The population of the town she comes from is written in every fold of the average woman's gown. There is a picturesqueness about the simplicity of a city woman's frocks which the more rate tollettes of her country sister lack. The city woman ventures on daring effects, large hats, unusual combina-tions, and a distinct originality in her firessing. The woman from the country bott), Miss Virginia C. Clay and Miss Metown dressmaker, who by force of impossible fashion plates and sage remarks as to what "they" do or do not "wear altogether in New York," palms off on her gowns with as much individuality about them as the fourth sheet in a quire of letter paper. The bad carriage of the average woman from the country town is due to the dressmaker who willfully cuts a dress body too narrow aeross the bust. Public opinion is a tyrant whose power is inversely proportional to the size of the town one lives in. The city woman dares to be original. The country woman does not. The former wears what ever she pleases, the latter whatever her milliner makes for her. If we had no dressmakers we would have few badly thresseld woman, for each woman wall. woman does not. The former wears what ever she pleases, the latter whatever her milliner makes for her. If we had no dressmakers we would have few badly dressed women; for each woman would of necessity be forced to make clothes which would reflect her own originality. The women who attended the press convention were an unusually well-dressed body. They can be sufficiently well-dressed body. convention were an unusually well-dressed body. They came from all over the country, but one of them—no less a personage than Miss Virginia Clay, of Alabama—says that nowhere in the country has she seen such pretty women and such well-dressed women as right here in St. Paul. The well-dressed woman is the wise woman who studies
