

PLAYING THE HORSES.

An Idea of How the Book Betting at Horse Races is Conducted.

How the Books are Made Up and Backed by the Great Talent.

Horse Exchange Terms Translated into Their Simple Equivalents.

It is Easy on the Surface, But Very Hard to Pick Three Winners.

For the past sixteen days the papers have been filled with accounts of the races at the Hamline track and the public has doubtless had its fill of that class of reading matter.

There are race meetings all the year round, and consequently race betting all the year round. Every detail of each race is telegraphed as it occurs, and the crowd in a racing exchange knows the features of a race nearly as well as the crowd at the track.

BOARD IN AN EXCHANGE.

This is a Saratoga race, and the bookmaker evidently believes Ranocosa will win, so he only offers 7 to 10 against him, and will lay no odds that he will not run as well as second place.

At the race track the betting is made in what is called the wagering ring. Twenty bookmakers are usually posted with odds and a thousand people are pawing and climbing all over each other in their wild desire to back their favorites.

BOARD AT THE RACES.

This is an exact fac simile of a board last Tuesday, except that the name of the bookmaker is changed. In this race Princess Lino and Ed Hopper belonged to the same stable and were, consequently, played together in the betting.

as the Williams entry. Marion C was the favorite, and the books offered only 4 to 5 against her and would not bet against her running as well as second.

A FOREIGN FRAUD.

Additional Details Respecting the Issuance of Bogus Medical Diplomas.

The State Medical Board of Minnesota, whose efforts to trace out the authors of forged medical diplomas presented in the various states bordering on Canada were detailed in the GLOBE a few days ago, is hard at work prosecuting several cases, and hope soon to have the perpetrators brought to justice.

Dear Conroy and Friend: I have just received your letter with the amount. I have sent the same to Montreal. What you ask for will be sent you in full when I send it by express to your address at Graton, Truly yours, but for the prevalent breeze there would have been nothing but mosquito-bitten grease spots to tell of the summer boarders. The aristocratic demureness of Cottage Park—somebody has said they were aristocratic—have fairly shimmered in the heat, though those have taken any part in the transaction for in sending him the money I told him to send the whole thing to Graton, I remain your friend and confidant.

The past week has been all summer at White Bear. It might be truthfully added that it has been the only all summer week of the season. Heretofore, take it week by week, and life at White Bear has been one long rainbow chase after summer.

Oh, yes, take it all around, it was a great week at White Bear. In the heat of the summer.

SCENES AT MARKET.

The Thorough American is Not Partial to the Public Market.

Which is Essentially Foreign, and Largely Patronized by Foreigners.

All Nationalities Commingle and a Driving Business is Done.

The Market Opens With the Dawn and Continues All Day.

"This little pig went to market. This little pig stayed at home," sings De Wolf Hopper and everybody applauds and applauds again till he has sung the song three times and passes for lack of breath.

Every place where human beings dwell together in any considerable numbers has a kind of a market. The business of America is transacted in what, to the great disgust of our transatlantic brethren, we call "stores."

In the early mornings of these August days, when the sun is beginning to shimmer at the prospect of another day's work, when the buildings that have been out all night look shabby and discolored, when even the street sweepers have gone home and nobody but an occasional faded-looking newspaper man on his way home disturbs the quiet of the clean streets, the market begins to fill up.

Sicilian with eyes unfathomable and jealous. One could easily fancy him taking the solemn oath of the vendetta. He smokes of garlic, but—well, he looks pretty, and the beseeching look in his brown eyes as he cries his damaged wares is irresistible. or a muffler, but busy as their fingers are their eyes never lose a possible customer. The man with the cotton neckties and cheap jewelry basks in the sunshine of a clear conscience. The country adds additional charm to the sweet peas and marigolds and gold-headed pansies and mystic passion flowers she sells. Here and there a cinders-a-tan-colored boy, with a bunch of sorry-looking water lilies in each hot hand, and two sunburned feet, finds a way to an assortment of new shoes. There are a dozen or so tow-headed children belonging to the market women, and when Elizabeth, the Eliza there is sometimes a very interesting row.
