She will present a company much stronger than was seen in the piece here last season, and introducing a wealth of special scenery effects. The old favorites, Amy Ames and George W. Thompson, will appear in the cast, and, in addition, the company has been augmented by the engagement of some decidedly clever people. The comedy features of the play have been improved, and increase the interest in the skit very largely.

AFTER THE FESTIVAL. Minneaplis Resuming Her Wonted Aspect.

Minneapolis has resumed her normal appearance of every-day life, and nothing remains of the great parade of Wednesday except the pleasant memowhich as yet have been but partially removed. One spectator of a mathematical turn of mind kept tab on the procession, and his figures are both interesting and valuable. According to his statement there were 24 bands of music, 613 floats, 36 pieces of fire depart-ment apparatus drawn by 110 horses, 16 carriages and 476 persons on horseback. In all there were about 2,500 men in the parade, besides several hundred ladies The band contest proved to be very unsatisfactory to at least two of the bands. Duluth and St. Cloud both claim that they were not given a fair show, the former in particular being dissatis-fied with the decision. No formal pro-test, however, has been lodged with the committee, so the matter will probably be allowed to drop where it is. One per-son was so dissatisfied that he wished to get up a contest between the Jordan band and Duluth and offered to bet $500 on the latter, but the Jordan boys would have none of it.

To be a success an exposition must have the patronage of the people, and it must cater to their wishes in regard to the class and character of the attractions which the public is asked to inspect and patronize. The exhibits must be pleasing and instructing or they will be pleasing and instructing or they will not take the trouble of coming the second time. That the Exposition which has been in progress in this city for the past month, and the doors of which will be closed on the coming Saturday, has been a success cannot be doubted, as the immense crowds which have gathered every day to see the various things of interest in the big building have amply testified to their complete approval. Not only have the people of Minneapolis been to the Exposition, but the people of the whole Northwest have been to this city for the purpose of seeing the magnificent array of attractions which have been gathered together by which have been gathered together by weeks and months of patient toil by the Exposition management. the summer.

Mrs. Young is possessed of a petite form, dark hair and snapping orm, dark nair and snapping black eyes, and speaks with a slight foreign accent. She claims to be at a complete loss for her arrest and says it is spite work, but has no idea who wished to vent their spite by placing her behind the bars. A GREAT DISCOVERY. The Lost Art of Hardening Copper

Found by Peter Johnson.

Peter Johnson, a resident of Dassel, Minn., claims he has discovered the long lost secret of hardening copper. The art was well known to the pre-historic races, but although many attempts have been made to discover the process all have been noted by their failures. Mr. Johnson has made his secret known to Nils Nilson, a ma-chinist, and they propose to erect a factory in this city for the manufacture factory in this city for the manufacture of many articles that are now made of steel. It is claimed by the inventor that by his process he can make copper as hard as the finest-tempered steel, and that it will be more durable and much cheaper. About 1,000 men will be employed in the new industry.

IN EARNEST NOW. William H. Eustis Says the Convention Must Be Secured.

The men who do the hustling for Minneapolis have done so well with the harvest festival in a short time that they deem nothing impossible now. Having unloaded that cargo they intend to get the Republican convention tend to get the Republicangeonvention now. So says William Henry Eustis. He worked for the harvest festival, and his heart is in the convention idea. If his hope be well grounded all Minneapolis has to do is to ask for the convention and get it. The committee on securing subscriptions to the guaranty fund of $50,000 has been working under cover of darkness it seems, while the general public supposed that the members of that committee were doing nothing, having given up all thought of getting the requisite number of subscriptions. Mr. Eastis says that the committee has been hustling all the time, and that it has raised nearly all the money that will be needed. Said he yesterday afternoon:

while at the exposition a short time ago she looked at the skeletons of the cliff dwellers and a few hours later her mind turned. She now imagines that in forty weeks she will become the mother of twin skeletons. Thomas Anderson, another unfortunate, was blso committed.

Will be needed. Said he yesterday afternoon:

"We have actually raised $35,000 on the guarantee fund, and by Saturday might I expect that we will have the full $50,000 subscribed. We made up our minds that we would not make any attempt to specify the convention pales.

we could raise $50,000, although not a third of that amount will probably be called for. The harvest festival was a huge success. It was the grandest peace huge success. It was the grandest peace parade in the history of modern times. Now let us go to work on the convention in the same manner and with the same push and energy, and we will land her, without a doubt. Minneapolis never made a failure of anythine, and she will not make a failure of this."

Mr. Eustis says that between 300,000 and 400,000 people were entertained in Minneapolis on the day of the festival, which conclusively proves that Minneapolis can take care of a national convention. If the committee get the money required by to-night it will devote all its remaining energies to the cultivation of the good will of the members of the national committee. Eustis thinks that holding the convention here will make the Northwest solidly Republican.

Peculiar Features of a Cave at Rockwood, Col.

There is a cave near Rockwood, a station on the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, which has been visited by many persons living near, as well as by parties from Durango. No particular mention of the cave has been made, as it seemed to be little worthy of notice as it seemed to be little worthy of notice

—nothing unique or striking.
On Sundey last a number of pleasureseekers left this city to join a party at Rockwood, who had planned to visit the cave. Abont four o'clock in the afternoon the members of the party, having disposed of their dinner, began to climb the hill, near the top of which the mouth of the cave is located.

After much exertion the foremost of the party reached the mouth of the cave, and, being in advance of his companions, they were much startled to see him fall backward in the low oak brush as if he had been thrown a catapult. His companions, pushing forward more vigorously, soon came to his rescue and interested in the success of the enterprise.

It is estimated that there have been hearly a half million people in the Ex-curious to know what the cause was, the entire company in a body pushed up the hill, which has a particularly steep descent near the mouth of the cave. To the astonishment of the whole number, the instant after stepping into the cave they found themselves all piled together in a spot near where the first had landed.

It took but a little while to recover from the entanglement, when they began to inquire the cause of this sudden excitement. They all agreed that they had seen nothing to cause such a thing, and they were curious to know the reason for the phenomenon. But how to find out what they wished was the thing to decide.

At last it was determined that the strongest gentleman of the party should gain a position at the side of the entrance, and thus protected, get an opportunity to reconnoiter. So, taking a circuitous route and avoiding a position directly in front of the opening, they soon found themselves close beside the entrance. Cautiously putting his head out beyond the protecting wall, the foremost peered in. His hat im mediately took flight down the declivity, but he was thus made aware of the exact state of affairs.

but he was thus made aware of the exact state of affairs.

The philosophy of the current of air in caves suddenly dawned upon him. As is well known, the air on a warm day in summer is much lighter on the outside of a cave or cellar than it is inside. Consequently, the cold, heavy air rushes out with great violence—enough in this case to cause the trouble spoken of and throw the party down the hill. of and throw the party down the hill.

Later, relating this tale, an old-timer told your correspondent of a former adventure of his at the same place. On a cold day in the early winter he was tracking a deer along this hillside when he was astouished to see the cave open up before him, and he noticed that the snow seemed to have been disturbed very recently, as though a body had been dragged into the entrance.

Without thinking he stepped forward very recently, as though a body had been dragged into the entrance.

Without thinking he stepped forward to examine into the cause of the disturbed condition of the snow, when he felt himself violently pulled into the cave, the force pulling him from his feet. He felt a shock, and for a while was oblivious to all around him. When his senses returned he found he was lying by and partially upon the body of a deer. Upon examination he found the body of the deer yet warm.

This led to a closer examination still. He at last determined that the force of the current of air blowing into the cave had drawn the deer in, killing it, but that when he was drawn in the shock was somewhat obviated by his striking the deer, thus saving him from death.

The explanation is just the reverse of the other, the air being warmer inside of the cave than out. The current flows into the cave during the winter, thus accounting for the strange affair.

COFFEE DRUNKARDS.

Their Fate Worse Than the Liquor and as Bad as a Morphine Fiend. In the course of his studies Dr. Mendel found very few instances in which the confirmed coffee drunkard was ever cured. The symptoms constantly grow worse, and are only to be relieved by worse, and are only to be relieved by large quantities of the beverage, the abuse of which has caused them.

In this way the victims go from bad to worse, for, though well aware of the mischief being wrought, they suffer so severely that they are afraid to abandon the habit, lest death should end the agony they experience.

After beginning with the agreeable infusion of the roasted berries they are driven, in their search for something more powerful, to swallow the tincture, which, though it operates for a time in the direction desired, soon loses its efficacy, and has to be swallowed in greater and greater quantities, the evil greater and greater quantities, the evil influence of the coffee being. of course, heightened by the alcohol used to extract its essential ingredients.

When brandy is taken only temporary relief follows, though not infrequently the intoxication produced by the latter is eagerly welcomed in order to dead en the anguish caused by the inordinate indulgence in the former.

The last stage of this peculiar disease shows itself in the sallow face and chilly hands and feet of the victims, coupled with an expression of dread and agony which settles over the countenance—a form of melancholia, alternated by hysteria, only to be temporarily relieved by repeated application to the coffee pot or to a strong tincture formed by steeping the crushed berries in spirits of wine.

Meantime the diseased state of the body is demonstrated by the acute inflammation which is apt to supervene at any moment.

A bruise, a cut, a prick or a sting, which in a healthy person would be scarcely noticed, is the starting point for inflammation of an erysipelatous character, so that it seldom happens that the coffee inebriate is long lived.

Coffee drunkards are more common among people of a nervous temperament than in the ranks of the stolid, phleg-matic folks, not easily moved by any stimulus, or who, like many Germans, prefer eating to drinking.

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE. A Night Struggle and Narrow Escape From Two Raving Mad-

New York Recorder. About twenty years ago a fearful crime was committed at C-, a small town near Boston. The wife of a farmer named Dillon and her children were cruelly butchered by a madman. The murderer, however, escaped, and, though well known in the locality, the police and citizens failed to discover his hiding place. It was said that the terrible loss Dillon had sustained was driving him insane. He used to go from house to house searching for Callagan, the madman, and vowing an awful yengeance.

from house to house searching for Callagan, the madman, and vowing an awful vengeance.

It was about a month after the mur. ders. I was sitting by my fireside listening to the wind howling outsidewhen I was aroused by a low, quick knock at the front. door. Opening it I beneld standing on the steps a halfnaked, shivering creature. Pushing me aside he crept toward the fire. First, however, he closed the door and gazed searchingly around the room.

I at once recognized Dan Callagan.

As I watched him he made a sudden spring from the fire and grasped me by the throat. I felt my breath leaving me as I was dashed against the wall. I fell to the floor nearly dead. I must have remained unconscious for some time.

The first sight that met my opening eyes is one that I can never forget. In the middle of the room stood two figuref, their hands grasping each other's throats, their eyes leaping madly in their heads! A fearful wound on one of their bodies and a dagger lying close by told of a fearful struggle.

Two madmen — Callagan and the father of the murdered children! A wild laugh resounded through the room, and then I saw the head of Callagan go crashing into the face of his antagonist.

and then I saw the head of Callagan go crashing into the face of his antagonist. Dillon fell to the floor instantly, and the next moment the dagger was buried deep in his breast. I quickly stood up and was about to interpose when the madman rushed upon me with the bloody dagger raised above his head ready to strike. I had no means of defending myself, nor was there any apparent chance of escape. But I moved out of his way and eluded the blows he aimed at me for a short time. Suddenly I stumbled over something and fell through the window (which must have been broken by Dillon) into the street.

I heard the door opening, and, on getting to the sidewalk, I saw the madman come leaping down the steps. I made hastily for the next street, the murderer after me. Seeing a door open, I rushed into a hallway and got into a yard. For a moment I considered whether I could hold the door closed against him, but seeing a garden in the rear, which rose as high as the first story, and which was accessible by a row of stone steps projecting out of the masonry, I let go the door-knob.

It did not take me long to gain the top, but the madman was close at my heels. Just then a terrible idea came into my brain. I waited for the murderer at the top, and, as he was about

As he lay there dying his fearful cries awoke the people in the house, and I can never forget the awful scene to the end of my life.

All their habits tell the story of their comparatively recent domestication. Although they may become very tame, as a lion's cub may, they have a great deal of the savage in them still.

They range long distances away from the farm house, and get mixed up with the neighbors' turkeys. They hunt as long as they can see at night, and then are fain to roost in the trees rather than in the hen house.

The farmer always says a turkey is the biggest fool that the Lord ever made, and declares that the goose is wisdom itself in comparison.

The turkey is no dou bt foolish, speaking in terms of civilization, but she understands the turkey business very well for all that. She has not yet so completely adapted herself to the ways of human beings as the hen and the goose have; and that is the whole story of ner foolishness. Perhaps she has her own idea of the wisdom of these other highly domesticated fowls.
