settlers — W . Pitt Murray. Gen. Johnson, J. Fletcher Williams and Mayor Smith. Mayor Smith is the only one who speaks of yesterday's blizzard as being the worst he has experienced, and, it is singular to note, the others refer to three separate blizzards which impressed them as being the wildest which had passed over the state. The story of each is here presented:

MANY PEOPLE PERISHED.

The Memorable Polar Wave of

January, 1873. Prof. J. Fletcher Williams came to St. Paul in 1855. He was interested in journalism up to 1867, when he became the secretary of the Minnesota Historical society, a position he still holds. Mr. Williams was seen at the capitol yesterday, and the raging blizzard put him in a reminiscent strain. He said: "The only polar wave which did any special harm in this state was 'that of Jan. 7, 8 and 9, 1873. It came on more

Jan. 7, 8 and 9, 1873. It came on more suddenly and with more severity than there is any record of previously. The afternoon of Jan. 7 had been unusually warm and pleasant. All over the state people were traveling with their teams, suspecting no danger. Suddenly, without a moment's warning, the air was filled with an icy blast, and a furious cyclone set in from the north, laden with blinding particles of frozen snow. On the prairies, and even on the streets of cities, it was impossible to see more than a few feet. Those traveling over prairie roads were speedily bewildered, benumbed by the speedily bewildered, benumbed by the icy blast, and, becoming helpless, would sink into the fast deepening snow, there to perish. The bodies of many were not found until spring. Children on the way hore from school were fre-quently lost in the same manner, and others lost limbs from freezing. I remember some boys and girls in a southwestern county had been several miles the blizzard sent a message to the leg-islature, calling attention to their duty to provide some relief for the sufferers. The legislature promptly voted $5,000 for the purpose. Ninety-four persons in thirty four conuties participated in this relief, their surgeons being compensated out of the fund for caring for

engaged in his law office in the Court block yesterday afternoon. The blizzard was howling outside; the snow was beating against the windows, and the few pedestrians on the street were hurrying along to get out of the storm nurrying along to get out of the storm as quick as possible. In marked contrast was the scene in Mr. Murray's office—a well-heated, cosily furnished and admirably appointed room. Mr. Murray dropped his pen on the arrival of a visitor and greeted him him with the remark: "This is old-time weather, by?" cheerily, adding: "I enjoy, it." eh?" cheerily adding: "I enjoy it;" and he looked as if he did. "Yes." he continued, in reply to ques-tions, "I've seen many Minnesota blizzards, as many, probably, as any old settler now living." Mr. Murray located in this city in 1849, and has been promently identified with it since.

"I have gone through some pretty tough blizzards," proceeded Mr. Murray, "and one I remember very particularly. It was on March 5, 1854. The legislature adjourned March 4, and the following day A. H. Cutheart, of the following day A. H. Cutheart, of the German-American bank, and myself left the city for a visit East. There were no railways in Minnesota in those days—in fact, none this side of Chicago. We took the stage across the river—the depot was on the West side—and proceeded south as far as Farmington. It was called Willoughby's in those days. We had experienced very nice, open weather on our way down, and everything indicated an early spring. We congradulated ourselves upon an enjoy. thing indicated an early spring. We congratulated ourselves upon an enjoyable trip, when on reaching Willoughable trip, when on reaching Willoughby's a blizzard started. It was precisely like this—precisely. It raged without intermission for two days, and was the toughest experience that I can now call to mind. The driver of the mail coach attempted to get away on the second day, but after going a mile or so had to give up and return. I don't know whether any great damage was done, for, as soon as possible, we continued our journey and I did not return for several months."

"This blizzard is exactly like the one of '54," pursued Mr. Murray. "It came on just in the same way. We had a balmy, springlike day, and within twenty-four hours every track had been obliterated, snow drifted and made the roads impassable, and to venture out

Of course, I've gone through hundreds of blizzards since that of '54, but I remember it most distinctly because of the two days' imprisonment at Willoughby's, and the circumstances attending this one bring it more vividly to my mind."

Johnson has, therefore, had a long experience of the Minnesota climate, and when seen yesterday at once acknowledged that the blizzard was up to the established standard. He proceeded:

Mayor Smith Never Experienced More Severe Weather.

"I have been here thirty-nine years," said Mayor Smith, "and I have no recoflection of a blizzard quite so wild as this. Up on the hill it is extremely severe. The wind rushes on at the rate of forty miles an hour, I should judge, and it is a mighty cold temperature, too, making it almost unbearable. Yes, I am ing it almost unbearable. Yes, I am sure it is the worst blizzard I ever experienced. I remember the great blizzard of 1874, but it was nothing in comparison. Then in April, 1882, we had a heavy fail of snow, accompanied by driving winds; but the temperature was high, and one did not suffer, although it was about an impossibility to get from high, and one did not suffer, although it was about an impossibility to get from place to place. The street cars were all distributed along the different lines, unable to move till the next day. And the very day I landed in St. Paul a blizzard was prevailing. It was the 1st of May. 1852, and a more homesick man could scarcely be imagined. But it was not cold, however."

A Sioux Band Want the Governor's Intercession With Uncle Sam. Gov. Merriam will entertain a distin-guished group of Indians, members of the Bde-wa-kaw-ton-wan band of Sioux, commencing at 11 o'clock today. These Indians are located on farms in Birch Coolie, Renville county, and Lower others lost limbs from freezing. I remember some boys and girls in a southwestern county had been several miles from home in a wagon to a singing school, and were caught on a bleak prairie. They were out all that terrible night, and when rescued, two days later, every one of them had their hands and feet frozen so that amputation was necessary. They were brought to St. Paul a few weeks subsequently, where their piteous and helpless condition secured a large subscription of money. In all, 70 persons in Minnesota lost their lives, three or four score of others were seriously crippled, and 200 or 300 cattle perished. Gov. Austin a few days after the bilizard sent a message to the legeral of these families now residing in South Dakota who have appealed to Senator Pettigrew to aid them in bring-ing their claim before the interior de-partment. The senator has taken up the matter, and success seems so certain that the Minnesotamembers of the tribe have decided to file an application for their quota, which will be, if allowed, at about the rate of $500 per male Indian, and possibly interest on that amount since 1836. It is probable that Gov. Merriam will refer their application to Senator Davis

Supreme Court Takes a Flop on a

Bond Case. A case in which the supreme court reverses itself is the case of Asa Guelford vs. The Soo Railroad Company, a test case to compel the Soo to pay a $25 mortgage coupon bond, one of many neld by Guelford against that company The bonds have a term of stipulation in the trust deed providing that no suit shall be brought until after a requisi-tion shall have been made on the trustee mentioned in the bonds. Guelford, however, disregarded the stipulation and brought suit. The case was decided against him in the trial court, and which against him in the trial court, and which court was sustained by the supreme court in a decision hat ded down July 28 last. Lusk, Bunn & Hadley, of St. Paul, then become interested in the case, secured a reargument, which has resulted in the supreme court reversing its own judgment of July 28, and declaring that Guelford has a right to recover on his bonds. The point made by Lusk, Bunn & Hadley was that the original decision affected every rairoad bond now floating in the United States, depreciating their value by practically making them non-negotiable. The syllabus of the supreme court follows:

Frank C. Moran, the Minneapolis tailor arrested and convicted of doing a business that was in violation of the lottery laws of Minnesota, will have to pay the fine prescribed by the Minneapolis municipal or the Hennepin county district court. Moran's scheme was to have forty men form a club, and, by paying $2 down, take a chance at securing a $40 suit of clother at a drawing to be held that or the following week. Of course only one of the forty could secure a suit that week, but the thirty-nine remaining ones might put up $1 each and take a chance at the drawing for another suit, and so on. As soon as a man was lucky enough to draw a suit he dropped out without paying in any more money, and when a man had paid in $40 he could obtain a suit of clothes, no matter whether held a lucky fleket or inct. The scheme was satisfactory to the lucky fellows, but the unlucky ones soon commenced to make trouble. One of the latter happened to be L. L. Hammon, in Room 610. Boston block. was Fritz Webber. The sheriff left in search of Webber Monday evening, and captured his man yesterday noon as he was catering a hotel in Eau Claire with Mrs. Farnholz and her little girl. Webber at first denied his identity, but the sheriff, by asking the little girl a few questions, was soon sure that he had the right parties, and placed a pair of iron bracelets on Mr. Webber.

The history of the whereabouts of the guilty pair since their elopement on March 3, as learned by the sheriff, is as follows: The morning they left the city they went to Minneapolis. This was only a blind, however, as they returned to St. Paul in the afternoon and went to Beldenville, Wis., a small village between Ellsworth and River Falls. Here they remained until last Monday, when they returned to Hudson and put the boy on board a train for St. Paul with a letter for his father, and, taking the little girl, left for Eau Claire. The sheriff traced them to a hotel in that city, but they had only stopped there a part of Monday and removed to another lodging place. He kept a constant lookout until his search was rewarded yesterday noon. The woman was greatly disconcerted over her lover's arrest, but informed Mr. Bean that she would not return to St. Paul. It is probable; however, that she will change her mind and return to her husband, who, it is stated, is ready to forget and forgive now that Webber will be punished. The warrant which the sheriff took with him charged Webber with embez-taking the sum of $48 that had give now that Webber will be punished.

The warrant which the sheriff took with him charged Webber with embezizing the sum of $48 that had been intrusted to him by Vorwaerts Lodge, I. O. O. F. Webber was one of the trustees of the lodge and the money was given him to deposit in a savings bank. He is accused of embezzling smaller sums in addition to this that that had been given him for a similar purpose. Besides these offenses Webber took $150 of Contractor Latham's money and a costly revolver from the same party. The complaint charging him with embezzling the lodge funds was sworn out by August Hohenstein. After Sheriff Bean had escorted him to the Eau Claire depot and was waiting for a train, Webber asked to be allowed to step into the toilet room. The sheriff informed him that he might do so, but he would first search him. He found a loaded revolver in the man's pocket. It is more than probable that Webber intended to kill himself, as he made no attempt to leave his seat after he had been relieved of the revolver.
