

ARTHUR P. GORMAN.

A Favorite Son Who May Become a Democratic President.

As a Young Protege of Douglas He Blossomed into Political Life.

Remarkable Political Generalship That Won Him Many Victories.

A Born Diplomat and Most Brilliant Strategist in the Field.

He Materially Assisted the Little Giant Down in Illinois.

Pen Pictures of His Quiet Domestic Life and Charming Family.

If Arthur P. Gorman becomes president of the United States his rise to that most dignified station in the republic will furnish another example of the old saying that opens to every American boy who has the right mettle, the opportunity of being the chief executive of the greatest country in the world. His childhood days were spent upon HELPED THE LITTLE GIANT. Gave His Genius for Organization a Chance in the Illinois Campaign.

Evidently Senator Douglas found his young protegee very useful and valuable in the great political struggles in which he was constantly engaged. The personal relations between them became more intimate, and the Maryland land was cordially received in the family of the Illinois statesman and became his private secretary and confidant.

SENT TO LIBBY PRISON.

Unfortunate Episode in the Career of Gorman's Father. He was sent by the federal government to Libby prison, where he was confined for a period of several months.

ENTRANCE IN ACTIVE LIFE.

As a Page in Congress He Got His First Insight into Politics. At the age of fourteen he put aside his school books, and, as a page in the house of representatives, entered into the broad field of national politics.

his management of national campaigns and elections. But Gorman has had a way ever since he became prominent in public life of surprising his opponents and surpassing the expectations of his most sanguine friends. In this, as in every position he has undertaken, he developed capacities that no one had given him credit for. In every case he has shown that long before he had made known his intentions to the world, his position he had been diligently preparing himself to perform its functions with wisdom.

DEFEATED HIS OPPONENTS. The Hardest Fight Ever Experienced by Gorman.

In 1873 the first break in the harmonious relations among the triumvirate factor in the state. Hamilton's misfortune to fall out with every president of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal from 1867 down, and it was his destiny to break with Gorman also. This came about when a successor to Senator Hamilton became to be named, and Whyte was anxious to be returned, but Whyte, whose term as governor had nearly expired, was also ambitious to go to the senate and the president of the canal had now grown to such an extent that Gorman threw his strength to Whyte and the latter went to the senate. Mr. Gorman was in the meanwhile elected to state senate to succeed John Lee Carroll and was re-elected in 1877. It was during this season that he succeeded in adjusting the differences between the canal and the state.

CAREER IN THE SENATE. His Fight Against the Force Bill a Brilliant Success.

At the next session of the legislature in 1878, the breach between Gorman and Whyte began to grow wider. They split upon the selections as United States senator from the Eastern shore. Whyte's choice, who was popular and secure of the nomination, Whyte's influence was now constantly growing weaker, while Gorman's was getting stronger. To the political difference was now added a personal dislike between the two men.

HIS WIFE AND CHILDREN. Most Delightful Entertainments at the Gorman Home.

Mr. Gorman's domestic life has been a peculiarly happy one. His wife was Mrs. Hattie D. Schwartz when he married her. She is the daughter of Dr. Donagan, of Reading, who was naval officer at Philadelphia during President Buchanan's administration. They have six children, of whom the eldest daughter have, during the last few years, taken a very active part in the social duties of Washington. As Senator Gorman brought to the duties of every office to which was called the ability of a scholar, so he has shown in his private life the same measure of the social obligations of his honorable station with dignity and grace.

AS A CAMPAIGN MANAGER. Senator Gorman One of the Shrewdest in the Country.

As a campaign manager Senator Gorman really stands without a peer in the country. The Maryland campaigns under his management have been great in their way, and some of the most brilliant successes have been won. In the face of the bitter opposition on the part of members of his own party, the independent campaigns under the active management of such men as Cowan, Marshall, Donaghy, and other powerful men, who were backed by an almost unlimited supply of cash, were the most bitter political battles ever fought here. The most violent personal onslaughts were on Gorman and his friends, and every possible means which ingenuity could devise and money could buy were used to bring about his political downfall.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT. Charged With Assault.

In 1874, when Whyte was a candidate for governor, he was supported by Hamilton who was then United States senator. The effective work of Whyte was done by Mr. Gorman. Gov. Whyte, on taking his seat, appointed him president of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. The appointment at that time created a great outcry, as it meant the displacement of James C. Clark, whose executive ability was then highly thought of. Mr. Gorman, however, soon showed that he had made good use of the opportunities his prior appointment as a director in the canal and given, in a very short time, the canal had grown to be a strong competitor to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which it has since surpassed in the coal regions. It not only reduced the salary of the president of the canal from $10,000, but the amount paid Gen. Clark, to $4,000, but managed to greatly decrease the expense charge of shippers, while abating the charges of the canal only 10 cents during the entire period of his presidency.

GORMAN'S DOMESTIC LIFE. Nothing Permitted to Interfere With His Enjoyment of His Home.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of Senator Gorman's career and the constant wonder of friends and opponents alike is his beautiful domestic life. Thoroughly devoted to his home and his family, he is fairly idolized by his wife and children. One would imagine that a man so deeply immersed in national affairs would have little time to give to domestic details or to love pleasures. Yet no one takes a more minute interest in the affairs of his home or gives himself up more completely to his family and amusements than Gorman. Political matters are never permitted to interfere with the interests of his family, and relaxation from the excitement and strain of a busy season found in a game of ball with his son and some lady friends is a frequent occurrence.
