

OLDSYKES AND SARAH

An Aged Couple Who Take Life Easy and Enjoy It to the Full.

The War Scares of Harrison's Administration De-nounced.

Situation of the Behring Sea Difficulty Succinctly Set Forth.

A Specimen of the Rising Generation Covered With Glory.

Why not take life easy? I never could see the use of a man toiling day in and day out; his wife wearing her body out in order to keep down household expenses; the couple depriving themselves of every little pleasure which goes to make life bearable...

Old Sykes and Sarah Josephine are not overburdened in financial ways. They have just sufficient to keep them in comfortable circumstances, and this position is slightly enhanced by the small profits of a dry store they run. The store contains a conglomeration of every thing—from a wienerswurst to ice cream and oysters to herring. Some weeks the business gives a small profit; other weeks it just pays bare expenses.

Old Sykes and Sarah Josephine never complain. The store is not only a small source of revenue; it is also a source of attractive employment for Old Sykes. The store and residence are under one roof, and at the rear of the store there is a cosy sitting room. Here Old Sykes and I are accustomed to sit and smoke an evening—that is, when I can manage to get over to his place. I have a wife, seven children and a mother-in-law, and the cares of such a family keep me pretty well occupied.

For Mrs. O'Reilly when Pat gave up the ghost, but bravely shouldered the burden laid upon her, aided, I am inclined to think, by assistance from her nephews, who is beloved by the poor in the neighborhood.

I spent the evening with Old Sykes Tuesday. The old man had been reading about the Behring sea difficulty, and the so-called strained relations between England and this country. When I made my appearance he at once leveled a question at my head and Sarah Josephine, smelling a lengthy discussion, decided upon a visit to Mrs. O'Reilly. On such occasions it is usual for me to "keep an eye" on the store. There are very few customers during the evening, but the store always remains open till 10 o'clock. I was forcibly impressed by the way in which Old Sykes handled the Behring business. There is a great deal of misconception about it and if its true bearings were more widely understood there would be less of this wild talk about war.

Old Sykes put the situation in this way: "The Behring sea is situated between Siberia and Alaska. The Canadians claim the right to capture seals in this sea, and this is denied by Americans—hence, the war. The Behring sea is surrounded by the interpretation of several old treaties and bills of sale, and the only thing that settles the matter is arbitration. Both countries have agreed to this, but, in the meantime, until the arbitrators arrive at a decision, Uncle Sam does not do a thing. The war, therefore, is to this England kicks, and well, there you are."

It is a pretty nice, no doubt, but Old Sykes and I agreed that there was nothing in it calling for resort to arms. I am opposed to war; so is Sykes. There is too much talk about the war, and the people who do the most shouting are the individuals who would run away at the first scent of powder. Wars are terrible evils and should not be resorted to except under the direst need. It is outrageous that much of this talk should be done for political effect. Old Sykes' remarks on this point were, to my thinking, very pertinent. He said: "Have you noticed that during the Harrison administration there has been a continual succession of war scares? He had hardly warmed the seat of the presidential chair when the newspapers belched forth lurid articles on the probability of a class between Germany and the United States. We tided over that, and Harrison became convinced a few months with the billion-dollar congress and the iniquitous McKinley bill. Having accomplished the work for which the millionaires of the country payed him in the White house, the president next indulged in heroics with Italy, an insignificant European power, and was followed by some peculiar dirty work during the Chilean rebellion, the culmination of which was the outrage committed by the victorious Chileans on some American sailors. That was undoubtedly

A Bad Break of the Chileans, but was largely owing to the partisan policy of the United States in that country. War talk followed, and so that Mr. Harrison could make himself solid, he sent a war message to congress twelve hours after Chile had decided to 'eat the rag.' Chill out of the way, the Behring question is revived and now the newspapers are red hot with sensational announcements. The two countries are said to be massing their troops on the Pacific, and the thunder roll of their big guns may be expected at any moment. The flight of Jid Sykes' eloquence was interrupted at this point. A little boy entered the store, and I proceeded to ascertain his wants. "Please, sir," he said, "will you give me change for a quarter?" "Certainly," I replied, smiling, and at once secured the necessary change for the little boy. The little boy remarked as I handed him the money, "my mother, Mrs. McManassey, says I'm to tell you she'll send the quarter round on Saturday."

There did not seem to me anything strange in this request, so, renewing my smile, I bid the little boy hurry back to his mother, and rejoined Old Sykes. We continued to discuss the Behring sea, and eventually came to the conclusion that there could be no bloodshed over who had the right to kill those seals, for towering above the small-minded, self-claiming politicians—followers of Lord Salisbury and President

Harrison—there was an overwhelming majority of the two greatest nations on earth, speaking one language, who were unalterably opposed to the cruel arbitrament of war. It was, we thought, to be regretted that while in the old countries there was a growing sentiment against standing armies and powerful naval squadrons that the tendency in this country was in the other direction. The greatest conquest a nation can make was not by bloodshed, but by uplifting of humanity—the routing of ignorance and evil. The first country's work of this country we agreed was in this line, but owing to the growth of plutocratic power the corruption which had been brought to bear upon public men and the insatiable desire for money making there was a fear that the glorious ideal set up by the fathers of the nation was going to be deserted for false gods. Sarah Josephine returned, and it being near 10 o'clock I rose to prepare for home.

"Oh! by the way," I carelessly remarked to Sarah Josephine, "there was a customer in the store this evening. The customers are so few and far between that you never forget the number, but you sometimes do forget how long it was since the last one was in. But this by way."

"That was there," inquiringly replied Sarah Josephine. "Yes, Mrs. McManassey's little boy came for change for a quarter. I'm with emphasis on the 'I' gave it him, and he says his mother will send the quarter on Saturday."

From the way in which Sarah Josephine's lowest jaw dropped, I at once instinctively suspected I had made a fool of myself, and when she had ceased speaking and indulged in a hearty laugh I defended my submission. Elizabeth Jacob with myself that, seizing my hat, I kicked myself home and refused to talk to her any more. Mr. McManassey's little boy did not make his appearance last evening. I am out a quarter.

TORTURE AND FAILURE

Was What She Met With From Physicians Whom She Consulted in the Hope of Finding Relief.

"Yes, I have had a good deal of experience in trying to get cured of severe catarrhal trouble," said Mrs. D. F. Schrockstein, of 327 St. Clair street, whose husband is an electrician with the St. Paul City Railway company. "My trouble began ten years ago with a cold in the head, grew gradually worse until the catarrhal process extended to my throat, my ears, bronchial tubes and stomach. I was so weak that I was forced to seek medical aid. Mr. James C. Donegan, residing corner Exchange and Wabasha streets, opposite the capitol, employed with the Boak Fish company, 211 East Third street, says: 'My trouble began ten years ago with a cold in the head, grew gradually worse until the catarrhal process extended to my throat, my ears, bronchial tubes and stomach, and I was so weak that I was forced to seek medical aid. The dropping of mucus, with the consequent hawking and spitting, annoyed me constantly. Especially in the morning I would strain and cough, raising large chunks of disgusting matter, and then, of course, could eat no breakfast. My throat was sore and dry, and pained me to swallow; there was a dull, throbbing ache back of my ears, and the rumbling, roaring noises made my hearing dull and imperfect. Several sharp pains would start in the lower part of my stomach and shoot through to my back. I suffered a great deal with a weakening and loss of appetite. My heart fluttered at times, and I ran down in flesh and strength faster than ever. Sleep did me no good; I could not rest, and my ambition to move when morning came and I would have to get up. Under Drs. Copeland and Hunt's treatment, which frequently brought on profuse sweating, I felt fresh and vigorous. It's no longer such a disagreeable task for me to get up in the morning and go to work. I know that I owe the great change to the intelligent, careful and scientific treatment I received from Drs. Copeland and Hunt, and I heartily recommend them.'"

MRS. D. F. SCHROCKSTEIN, 327 ST. CLAIR STREET.

"I had been to a number of doctors and just simply got worse and worse all the time. I don't wonder at it so much now, though, for some of them treated my head and throat with applications and sprays that made me suffer terribly when they used them and which frequently brought on profuse sweating. I had frequent spells of heart fluttering, spells of choking that almost killed me. The treatment was far worse than the disease, and instead of helping me only made me worse. My head and throat got into a fearful condition, the passages became dry and chapped—my throat was so sore and swollen—at times almost closed—that I could not speak—could not articulate a word. Spells of headache and dizziness would come over me, when everything would turn black before my eyes and I would stagger and almost fall. As I grew worse the trouble extended farther down until my husband thought my LUNGS WERE AFFECTED—that it was leading into CONSUMPTION. I began to believe, so, too, I had a bad cough. My breathing was short and quick. There was a sore, tight feeling in my lungs and sharp, cutting pains that would shoot through under my shoulder blades. My appetite was very irregular, everything I ate seemed to lodge just before it would reach my stomach, and cause a full, tight, smothered feeling around my lungs and heart. I had frequent spells of heart fluttering that would leave me weak and exhausted. My sleep was broken by dreadful dreams, and I was just as tired in the morning as at night. If not more so. I lost flesh steadily; every part of my system seemed invaded by the disease and my strength of resistance was almost gone. 'This was my condition and experience,' concluded Mrs. Schrockstein, 'but I was not to be discouraged. When I was induced to go to Drs. Copeland and Hunt, they have given me the only real benefit I ever received. My health and strength are returning so surely and steadily I can scarcely believe I am the same woman. Their treatment is mild, pleasant and HEALING; one can feel when receiving it that it is relieving their trouble and not aggravating it. My experience with Drs. Copeland and Hunt has been more than satisfactory. I take pleasure in recommending them to my friends.'" as to cause vomiting. Later on the mucus that is raised is found to contain small particles of yellow matter, which indicates that the small tubes in the lungs are now affected. With this are often streaks of blood mixed with the mucus. In some cases the patient becomes very pale, has fever, and expectorates before any cough appears. In some cases sweat masses of cheesy substances are spit up, which, when pressed between the fingers, emit a bad odor. In other cases particles of a hard chalky nature are spit up. The raising of cheesy or chalky lumps indicate serious mischief at work in the lungs. In mucus gradually waste away into the lungs in a few weeks; in other cases it may be months and even years before the disease attacks the lungs sufficiently to cause serious interference with the general health. When the disease has developed to such a point the patient is said to have catarrhal consumption. With bronchitis there is more or less fever, which differs with the different parts of the day—slight in the morning; higher in the afternoon and evening. Sometimes during the day the patient has a creeping, chilly sensation, which may last half an hour to an hour, the surface of the body feeling dry and hot. During the night, near the morning, there may be sweats. Such sweats are known as night sweats, and are less or more profuse, which differs with the different parts of the day—slight in the morning; higher in the afternoon and evening. The pulse is usually more rapid than normal, and the patient loses flesh and strength. A fresh cold is all that is needed at this point to develop rapid consumption. In some instances the patient loses flesh and strength slowly. Then the patient gradually regains some of his strength, only to lose it again. A weak stomach and a dislike for food, which seems to have lost its taste, causes the patient to think he has a disease of the stomach instead of the lungs. In bronchial catarrh the voice often becomes weak, husky and hoarse. There is a burning pain in the throat, with difficulty in swallowing.
