

FELT EIGHTY MILES.

A Terrific Explosion of Powder on the Bay at San Francisco.

Three White Men in the Nitro-Glycerine House Instantly Killed.

The Exact Number of Chinamen Who Lost Their Lives Not Known.

Windows Shattered in Hundreds of Places in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 9.—At 9:23 o'clock this morning this city was shaken from end to end by a terrible explosion. What it was or where it occurred no one could tell. Before the people had recovered another explosion fully as severe as the first again shook buildings and caused windows to rattle. People began to realize that only the explosion of a powder mill could have produced a shock of that nature. The explanation had hardly been arrived at when at 9:33 there occurred a terrific explosion that shattered windows all over town, blew in skylights, broke plate glass on Montgomery avenue, California street, Montgomery street, Kearney street and other thoroughfares and caused people to rush into the streets as though a conflagration was about to engulf all the buildings about their ears. The consternation was still at its height when there followed two more explosions, less severe than the terrific one which had just been felt. Glass rattled into the street all over the city, and not a few buildings, according to their inmates, came near collapsing. Men in the tower of the fire alarm station were sure that the explosion of the stock market was about to occur. At the Palace hotel there was great fear among the guests, and all over the city there was created a feeling of alarm. The intensity of the shock can be appreciated when it is known that it was distinctly

Felt at Sacramento, eighty miles distant, and that windows were cracked at Nevada and other points along the bay shore, twenty-five miles from the scene of the explosion. Along the east side of San Francisco Bay are a number of powder manufactories, which have been scenes of periodical explosions, in which a number of lives have been lost. Highland, about half a mile from West Berkeley, and north of Berkeley and Oakland, are located the works of the Giant Powder company, consisting of chemical works, mixing and packing houses, five large buildings in all, together with three large powder magazines and a number of small ones, and it was here that the explosion occurred this morning. The explosion began in the nitro glycerine works, but confusion soon caused an explosion in one of the magazines. Flames also broke out to add to the danger, and through a wrecking train had promptly been sent from Oakland, the efforts of the crew were confined to keeping off the great crowds of people that pressed forward to the scene, for within 300 yards of the flames, unknown to many, was a magazine containing 300 pounds of black powder, the explosion of which would have caused great fatalities. The work of gathering the remains of the dead and caring for any one who might have escaped from the flames and was pushed forward rapidly as far as possible, but the scene was one of such confusion and danger that the work was slow at first. The flames from the burning packing and mixing houses were terrific and

Drove the Crowds Back Repeatedly. Chinamen were huddled together in little knots with soiled faces and hands, and their suffering was intense. Even surgeons were prevented from passing their canteens, for the largest of the black powder magazines lay just over the brow of the hill, and flames from the burning wreckage were creeping nearer and nearer from the top of the hill. Just about the magazine could be seen evidences of the explosion. On the western slope the scattered timbers of the giant powder works were blazing furiously, while a little yellow stream trickling down toward the bay showed where the contents of the recent tanks had emptied themselves. All the mixing and packing houses of the black powder and nitro glycerine works were blown up. The very first explosion that occurred caused the giant powder magazine to go up. The black powder mills lay directly in the path of the explosion and burning brands of the magazine were already wrecked buildings, and almost before the frightened Chinamen could collect their senses the powder in the black mills had exploded. It was for a long time impossible to gain any idea of the number of lives lost. The company declined to give out any particulars, and as most of the men employed were Chinese, the names were not obtainable. However, an estimate was made at 1 o'clock that there were 104, of whom 101 were Chinamen, but there was reason to believe that that estimate was far in excess of the actual number. The cause of the explosion is said to have been the upsetting of

A Barrel of Acid In the office, which is in the building. Early this afternoon no one would approach the magazine, which had not exploded, and which contained 300 pounds of giant powder and dynamite. Fortunately, however, the fire was kept away from the main magazine. Three white men, who were working in the nitro-glycerine house, were killed. They were JOHN BOWLE, WALLACE DICKERSON, CHARLES DEBERLIEGE. Their bodies were found. The head engineer of the glycerine house was blown twenty feet, and knocked senseless. The first explosion gave the men in other departments warning, and they ran in time to escape. Mrs. Painter, of West Berkeley, who was sick, was so affected that she is believed to be dying. A boy named Borchers was blown through the roof of one of the buildings. He will die. The body of a Chinaman was found on the railroad track, half a mile from the works. The remains of a Chinese boy frightfully mangled were found near the scene. John Farley, a workman walking near the mixing house, was blown into the bay, but swam out. The bodies of the three white men were found near the debris terribly mangled.

Later Accounts confine the list of dead among the white employees to these three men. It is almost impossible to ascertain the exact number of Chinamen who were killed. Only two bodies of Chinamen were found up to this evening, but it is believed that several others lost their lives. The bodies of the dead are now in Oakland mortuaries. One of the most striking features of the explosion was the extent of damage in the way of shattered windows. It was caused in this city, twelve miles from the scene. The officers of the Giant Powder company were seen after the explosion occurred. As they saw the wreck of nearly every structure, they expressed gratification at the extremely small loss of life, considering the terrific force of the explosions and the large number of men employed. They say it is almost impossible to estimate the loss, but $200,000 will probably be the outside figure for the damage to the powder works. The San Francisco Chemical works, owned by Egbert, Judson and J. L. N. Shephard, were almost completely destroyed, and their loss is not far from $150,000.
