

SAINT PAUL. CITY BRIEFS

The offices in the federal building close today. All the banks will close today (Columbus day) at noon.

John Jarvis paid $30 to the clerk of the court for selling whisky without a license. Mrs. Mitchell, 79 East sixth street, lost pocketbook and $10 on Broadway yesterday.

The West Duluth Electric company filed amended articles of incorporation with the secretary of state yesterday.

The charge of indecent exposure against Nettie Smith did not prove to be well founded and Judge Cory had to dismiss it yesterday.

Sunday hours will be observed at the post office today with the addition of one delivery by carriers. The office will be open from 7 to 11 a. m.

Only three more performances of Henry C. De Mille's great love story will be given at the Metropolitan opera house tonight, tomorrow matinee and Wednesday afternoon.

The board of state prison inspectors met in Stillwater yesterday, and completed their biennial report to the governor required by law. The report was read at the capitol as soon as it could be transcribed.

"Columbus day" will be celebrated at the Temple, corner of Minnesota and Tenth streets, by appropriate services, sermons and songs at 7:30 o'clock this evening.

Henry Hanlon, colored, was locked up last night by Detective Daly for stealing an umbrella from the store of Mrs. J. J. O'Connell and Roberts, and pawing it for $1.

BURGLARS AND WORMS

Seem to Be Having Their Own Way Right Along in the City.

The Residence of H. R. Bigelow Receives a Call at the Dinner Hour.

As Usual, the Officers Request That the Facts Be Kept From the Public.

Several Forgers, Not at All Clever, Beat a Great Many Merchants.

The reign of terror in the bosoms of the dwellers in the Saintry City, occasioned by the known presence in our midst of shrewd and daring crooks who walk the streets and enter houses day or night as they feel minded without let or hindrance, is not yet over.

It is just climbing into the heyday of its strength, and the festive crook is but now saying to himself: "This is a goodly land, and, as I am monarch of all I survey and my reign there is none to dispute, I will settle me down here and partake of the fat of this land and enjoy the fullness thereof."

Thus speaking, he sat here, and it seems that he has come to stay, for there doesn't seem to be policemen enough to do the job of catching and deterring the plunders of the city.

Of course the police hear of his operations—after they are accomplished—but so fearful are they that some crooks might capture a crook or two that they carefully suppress all reports of the operations and descriptions of the operations. They may be thought to be good policy, but the teaching of experience is the other way.

The most recent exploit of the burgling burglar to come to the surface has for its scene the large and handsome residence of H. R. Bigelow, at 288 Walnut street, corner of Exchange.

The scene was dressed with screaming girls and flying bullets. It was at dinner on Wednesday evening that the crooks gathered around the dining table, their faculties enlivened with the business in hand, and not a thought being given to the coveter of their goods. But the class of crook the most daring and dangerous of house-breakers, was about, and he was possessed of a "hankering" for some of the wealth contained in that house. He got down the stairs, unlocked the door, and entered the house, and made his way into one of the bedrooms, where he found through the window, expecting to enjoy an undisturbed inspection of the premises. But the second girl was also about, and she was not to be trifled with.

A POET'S EARLY LOVE

How the Sadly Sweet Secret of "In School Days" Was Solved.

The Little Playmate Whom Whittier Cherished in His Heart.

Even When Grasses on Her Grave Had Forty Years Been Growing.

A Story Which Is in Itself a Tenderly Pathetic Poem.

This is a great world for guessing. But for all that guesswork does not always make so clear a bull's-eye as it did in the case of the one love which first brightened and then saddened the life of the poet Whittier.

For many years, says a writer in the New York Recorder, people have surmised that his sweet ballad, "In School Days," was a cloaked confession of a romance, the outcome of which would be the marriage of the poet and the girl who was his first love.

When the star of the poet in Amesbury was the home of the poet an itinerant newspaper man spent a part of a summer at the beautiful farm, Amesbury and Haverhill are closely adjacent to each other and stand in the midst of meadows which are intersected by trout streams. The scribe in question was at that time an insatiable fisherman. All his days were spent, rod in hand, along the banks of the Quaker pond loved so well; but they were usually days spent in vain, for few and small were the trout he captured.

One day, when most of the bites had come from mosquitoes and the fishing apparatus seemed uncomely useless, the scribe quit fishing in disgust, and for diversion took to fishing in a slab fence. But carving was no more successful than fishing, for before the end of the first hour the hook was whittled out of the tough wood the luckless scribe broke his knife.

Did the find success in the art piscatorial? inquired the poet, gravely. "None whatever," returned the scribe, warmly, proud for once of his inability to succeed in the thing he had undertaken. "I had forgotten how to fish for trout," he said. "Not trout, but fish in general, I mean. I have never seen a trout since."

The offer was declined, whereupon the poet began talking of the days when he had fished in the Quaker pond. "I have never seen a trout since," he said. "I have never seen a trout since."

Memories of Childhood. Kate Field's Washington. Proud Young Teacher—Yes, sir, I teach the young idea how to shoot. "Strange—how is that?" "Then look out for paper balls."

WERE SMOKED OUT. An Irate Landlord Disposes of Unsatisfactory Tenants.

A High school girl, a Democrat—and a loyal one, too—sends in the following account of the trials of the Republican club in attending a Fourth war meeting.

The other evening a little incident occurred which shows that all is not "smooth sailing" on the sea of Republicanism. A young man, a Democrat, was added, enthusiastic Republicans from the Ninth ward went to hold a political meeting in a corner store in the Fourth ward. There a dispute arose between the politicians and the man from whom they had rented the store.

THE GRIND OF THE COURTS YESTERDAY.—Many Litigants Disposed of. The London and Northwest American Mortgage Co. and others to receive $1,445,000. Lawrence J. Terney has begun an action against O. W. Whittier for $3,000 on damages for cutting off the head and body with the butt end of a driving whip.

John Smith, indicted with William Stewart for going through the room of Mark Ellery on Washburn street, was allowed to change his plea from guilty to not guilty. He said he would be sixteen years old next January. Sentences were deferred.

Charles Paegel, the druggist at 75 West Third street, who recently assigned five scientific supplies to the state reformatory, was brought up for sentence, and was sentenced to the state reformatory. Thomas Berg, a young man of twenty-six, was sent to the state reformatory for having fooled the Menis, of the North city, with a good dinner for $100. He pleaded guilty when arraigned the first time.

TRANSFERRED THE CASE. Judge Brill Rules in an Important Case in the District Court. Judge Brill has filed an order transferring the case of Cresenza Rotterman against the St. Paul City Railway Company et al., from the jury to the court calendar. The action was begun to recover money because of the failure of the railway company to build and operate a line specified in a contract. It is held that the determination of the question of liability to the court depends upon a construction of the contract, or to operate it for one year after it was built, the property donated by the plaintiff must be returned or else its value ascertained. The court says that it is possible that the contract will bear the construction that the company is entitled to.

HOME AND SOCIETY

There are women who give their whole lives to their homes, while others find happiness only in society.

If you are a home woman, you know how day after day you "drag along," suffering agonies of pain that would appal a man.

Of course, a society woman is an impossibility without, at least, reasonable health. There isn't the least particle of doubt but that all your trouble comes from your womb. From its derangement flows the tide of misery—spinal weakness, nervous excitability, dizziness, bearing down, sudden faintness, etc.
