WOMEN SHOULD TRAIN

Impossible to Attach Sufficient Importance to Physical Culture.

Mistaken Idea That Much Strength Means Little Grace.

Some of the Social Events and Personal Doings of Yesterday.

A Melange of Matter of Special Interest to All Women.

It is not possible to have too much of such a good thing as physical calture in all its branches. It would seem that Fannie Edger Thomas has said enough in the following bright paper to convince all reasonable people of the value and importance of giving the proper care and training to this wonderful piece of mechanism, the feminiue

Many women hesitate to adopt physical culture through a false idea that naturalness means grace. "We do want to be graceful, but we hate affectation, they say. "What is natural and easy must be graceful. We become conscious, stiff and stilted once we meddle with nature and attempt to train ourselves into grace. Never were hackneyed expressions more utterly false than these. The many unfortunate surprises from mirror and photograph camera ought to prove that to any intelligent person. Thought may imagine a position of great dignity and elegance. The reflection discloses one of extreme awkwardness that is frequently ludicrous. While thought must underlie all grace, it is not able to speak through stiff, untrained muscles

Some people are born with natural thought and effort works marked improvement, while others, in order to attain any sort of satisfactory symmetry, must go into a regular course of training for development. Any one who would develop all her latent charm must pass through more or less of this.

Pleasing Expression of the Body is similar to harmony on a carefully tuned piano. When one portion of the body is keyed too high and another too low the result must be discord to the observer. This discord is awkward-ness. Proportional tension or laxity of the body produces its music, which is Among women there is the comfortable clumsiness of ignorance, the lissom indolent grace of the skilled muscle and the great crowded middle land of effort without training, showing stiff, awk-ward angularity, self consciousness and nervousness, as displeasing to the eye as uncomfortable to the owner.

Were thought upon the subject all that were necessary, one lecture, with Illustrations from everyday life, would dient to brain before it can fitly repre-By nature large-minded, independent,

Observe in the next company of which you are a member the hunching of shoulders to ears, chests hollowed into furrows, contracted brows, turned in toes, spasmodic contortions of the face, supposed to be expressive; incessant jerking of hands, arms and head; stiffen positions—an outward incongruines due to neglect of the laws of grace; bad habits of sitting, riding, walking, which distort or leave unaccented the shapely line of corsage, sleeve or limb, and which are chiefly the result of a nervousness born of the desire to please. Skilled Grace is always easy and comfortable. It makes a Bernhardt, a Salvini, a Lotta. Looking upon it each one imagines it easily attainable—till one tries! Unskilled motion is painful awkwardness. Half-trained skill is conscious affectation—the most displeasing of all.

The stumbling block in the way of improvement to many Americans is improvement to many Americans is found in their impetuous haste to show off, to rush into observation with halfbaked skill, as far from naturalness as from grace. Observers, disgusted, have been led to exclaim: "All this Delsartean work is affectation. I will have

It is not the simplicity of it, but the trained complexity of motion that makes grace. In the bow of a Salvini there are a score of motions, yet to look upon it is the most simple and natural thing in

Few pretty women get half the value of their figures on account of the stiff ungracefulness of the muscles. Untrained muscles do not grow beautifully wild, like children and flowers, but stiff and ungainly, without adaptability or expression.

The hand of a professional pianist, trained to habits of obedience to the brain, even in repose is speaking—full of expression. Compare it with that of

of expression. Compare it with that of the day laborer. Most of our bodies compare with the latter.

The first thing to do with the body is to "limber up," to make the muscles absolutely phable, but firm and strong, to make the different portions of the body individual or distinct from each other to make, all subservient to the other, to make all subservient to the dictates of the brain, and to make this obedience spontaneous and conscious

Even a "busy woman" should devote at least fifteen or twenty minutes twice a day to the training of her form to make it straight, round and flexible.

SUSPENDED ANIMATION.

Kate Field's Washington. I was walking down Bromfield street, in Boston, on a stormy day in December. The narrow sidewalk, covered with ice and trodden snow, and the sharp pitch of the street made pedestrianism a venture bordering upon rash trianism a venture bordering upon rasiness. As I was in somewhat of a hurry I pushed by a couple of fat, cautious, waddling gentlemen and started at a swinging pace down the treacherous incline. Suddenly I was aware that my feet had slipped from under me. Then came a flash, followed by darkness.

The same street stretched before me, only I was walking in the opposite only I was walking in the opposite direction. A hat was lying in the gut-ter, which struck me in the most whimsical way as being exactly like my whimsical way as being exactly like my hat. I was about to pick it up and examine it, when I noticed a group of men carrying a heavy object into an adjacent drug store. I pushed forward with curiosity, and was astonished to see that the heavy object was myself, hatless, my face deadly white, with some drops of blood clustered on the hair.

The men staggered in the drug store The men staggered in the drug store, and I followed thim. They laid their burden on the counter, and the druggist came rushing from a back room in frightened haste. He ruthlessly tore open the bosom of what I shuddered to perceive was my best coat, loosened the underclothing and bent down in a listening attitude. I shall never forget the expression of his face as he turned and looked up without lifting his body. "Gentlemen," he said, "the man is dead!"

I laughed outright at the preposter-ousness of the statement. My voice was ousness of the statement. My voice was perfectly audible to myself, but none of the others in the room seemed to hear it; at least, none of them turned to look at me. I heard one of the bystanders say that he would report the case at once, and the druggist nodded silently toward the telephone. As for me, I could endure the farce no longer, and walked out with a distinct consciousness of elation, as if I had suddenly become rid of a great burden or had realized some long-delayed hope. The snow was falling thickly outside, but I felt so strangely happy that the whirling storm seemed more beautiful than the fairest June sky I had ever seen.

I walked up Tremont street, my heart leaping with an undreamed-of joy in mere existence. On the corner of the first block whom should I meet but my dear old Dr. S., who had brought me into the world, and who had been my best friend and counselor until three years before, when blood poisoning, contracted during a critical surgical operation, had carried him off. The ing, contracted during a critical surgical operation, had carried him off. The recognition was mutual, and we fell into each other's arms with exclamations of surprise and delight.

"Why, doctor, God bless you! I thought you were dead."

"My dear boy! I didn't know that you had escaped."

I looked at my friend in blank amazement. "Escaped!" I cried. "What do you mean? Escaped what?"

"Flesh," cried the doctor briefly, while the same old laugh seemed to ring in his kindly voice. "Bones!" And he beamed upon me with his face like a plastic chunk of sunshine.

"I looked down at my tweed suit and cork-soled shoes. Then I gazed upon the doctor's expansive waistcoat peeping through his half-buttoned mackintosh. "I don't see that I have even escaped my clothes—or that you have, wither "I ronlied dubiously."

caped my clothes—or that you have, either," I replied dubiously.
"If you don't believe that you have escaped flesh and bones," said the doctor, seriously, "try walking through that lamppost." I advanced incredulously to the post backed off with a laugh, then moved up again, with the doctor's hand on my shoulder, and melted through the solid iron, or, to speak more exactly, the solid iron melted through me.

"Now, follow me through this old apple-woman," chuckled the doctor, and in an instant we had permeated a half-bushel of wormy fruit and a dame as withered and gaunt as the tree that in the least,

"Perfectly, so far as ocular demonstration goes," I replied, admiring the nonchalance and familiarity with which the doctor leaned upon the shoulder of one of the politicians, and, from force of habit while in the flesh, proceeded to examine his tongue. "Yes," I continued, "I am satisfied that I am not what I was but you will have the kindness." I was, but you will have the kindnees to explain why we both retain the same semblance as when we were in the

"Certainly," replied my friend. "We do not; that is, not really. Your present notion of form is a mere reminiscence. notion of form is a mere reminiscence. All newly-escaped persons—that is, all who have recently rid themselves of the flesh—retain for a time a certain sense-consciousness, as the eye, which has been gazing upon a bright object, retains the image of that object after the lids are closed. But as that image gradually fades away, so will your reminiscence of bodily form fade. Presently you will no longer see, but experience, which is a much more vivid and delightful operation of the soul. With the transformation which comes all the strangeness and unfamiliarity of the mid-world, as we call it, will pass of the mid-world, as we call it, will pass away, and you will not feel the least embarrassment, for instance, in walk-ing through the poor, dull-sensed bodies of people, or treating them in any way As the doctor spoke I became grad-

GRESHAM AS PREMIER.

The Judge Said to Be Slated as Cleveland's Secretary of State.

The Appointment Soon to Be Announced by the President-Elect.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8 .-- A special to the Herald from New York says: Judge Walter Q. Gresham, of Chicago, is to be secsetary of state in the Cleveland administration. This fact became known here today to a few persons. 'The offer of the post has been made to Judge Gresham and he has accepted. Mr. Cleveland himself will make the fact known in a day or two. This selection will be sure to create some surprise when it becomes known. The rumor that Gresham was offered the place was circulated here some time ago and was received with incredulity by many Democrats. They did not deem it possible that Mr. Cleveland would go outside the ranks of his party for a secretary of state, and did not think Judge Gresham would accept, even if the tender was made him. But the experiment has happened, and Judge Gresham will in two weeks resign his seat on the of state. Thus a man who four years ago was a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination is to become premier under the incoming Demo-

Personal Encounter Between Two

Illinois Republicans. SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Fe b. 8 .- Congressnan-elect Cannon and State Senator Bacon had a personal encounter in the lobby of the Leland hotel this morning, which resulted in painful, but not serious, injury to the congressman's nose and face. Cannon fell to the floor from the blows which were rained upon him, while the senator, who is many years the congressman's junior, and has something of a reputation as an athlete, escaped without a scratch. Each of the belligerents charged the other with being the aggressor, but the general belief is that both of the men were rather "eager for the fray." Cannon and Bacon have for some years been leaders of the Republican party. The congressman attributes his defeat in the congressional something of a reputation as an athlete. election two years ago to the opposition or lethargy of the Bacon faction.
