> The Lumbermen of the City Are Out on the Warpath.

Severson's Adventure With a Gas Jet -- The Mystery of a Leg.

The patriotic children of the Emerald Isle indulged in the "wearin' of the green" yesterday, in humble recognition of the day held sacred-the day commemorative of Ireland's patron saint, St. Patrick. The elements had apparently connived to make the day an enjoyable one, so far as the weather was concerned, for the sun shone bright and warm, and the usual blustering bullying wind was conspicuous by its absence. The day was celebrated in the city in a very quiet and unostentatious manner. There was no marching, no music on the streets and no gathering in public halls for the enjoyment of patriotic speeches alone. The churches held appropriate services in the morning, and in the evening there were quiet gatherings and entertainments in various parts of the city. The largest church attended service was at the Church of the Immaculate Concepformed and the good he had wrought the Irish people and their country. The important event of the evening was a banquet of representative Irishmen at the West hotel. There were over 150 gentlemen present. The or-chestra in attendance rendered appropriate and patriotic airs, and roused the banqueters to frequent campursts of en-thusiasm. The menu was an elaborate and substantial one. After the last course had been served and the of toastmaster, rapped the gathering of toastmaster, rapped the gathering to order and called upon Chris Gallagher to respond to the toast "America." He did so in his usual felicitious manner. America, he said, is the grandest country in the world, and one that Irishmen should feel especially proud to call their own. America is the home of all nations, but especially had its protective wing and munificence been accorded the natives of the Emerald Isle. He spoke of the grandeur of the country—its wealth and vast rethe country—its wealth and vast re-sources, its rapid strides along the line of science and civilization, and its high position among other countries on the globe.

Hon, A. R. McGill spoke on "The Day We Celebrate," and Hon, C. D. O'Brien, or St. Paul, on "Ireland." The condition of Ireland in those early uncouth days, he maintained, was even better than now, for without home rule the Irish people could not advance and keep in pace with the world. Matt Walsh responded to the toast "Our Early Days," and Judge J. P. Rea discoursed on "The Irish Soldier." His speech was a culogy on the soldier whose native country was Ireland, and he held that there never breathed a stauncher friend off the government in the time of peace, nor a truer patriot and brayer man in the time of war, than the Irish soldier. He referred in his characteristic picturesque ferred in his characteristic picturesque way to the behavior of this soldier in the wars of England and the wars of this

These lumbermen put themselves on record as being "agin" every member of the committee who worked against the passage of the bill. SEVERSON'S ADVENTURES. How the Gas Fooled a Man From Wisconsin. Olaf Severson, of Alma, Wis., got into a pile of trouble late Thursday night. He arrived in the city in the morning and took quarters at the St. James. He was out during the evening visiting friends and having a good time in general, and when he returned to the hotel the night clerk felt it his duty to warn him about blowing out the gas. Severson went to his room, and a short time afterwards a bell boy who had an errand to perform on the same floor no-ticed a terrible smell of gas. He called the clerk and they traced the smell to Severson's room. He was awakened after a good deal of pounding on the door and shown how to work the jet. About half an hour later the same bell-boy came running down to the clerk and said Severson had killed himself. It was found that his room was full of gas again, but the clerk could not effect an entrance, for the door was locked. Patrolman George Reviere was locked. Patrolman George Reviere was called in, and S-verson was finally innuded to allow the clerk to enter. The gas jet was wide open and the deadly fumes filled the room. Severson was hauled out into the fresh air and again told how to manipulate the gas. The clerk went back to his deak, but the ever-vigilant beli-toy had his curiosity aroused, and he soon put in an appearance at the office with the startling information that Severson was not in his room and could not be found. With a sigh the clerk took a scout around the sigh the clerk took a scoot around the building, and finally located Severson at the bottom of the stairs feading to the basement. He lay with his head in a pile of sand. How he came there he could not tell. He was escorted back to his room, and the weary night clerk tell asleen himself. asleep himself. For an Artificial Limb Found in a Basement.

Early yesterday morning a laborer going to his work saw something white and gleaming on the floor of the basement under the dilapidated old house at the corner of Main street and Second avenue northeast. He crawled in through the window and found the object was an artificial limb, almost new The limb was designed for a male, and the straps and sole of the foot showed it had been worn considerably. The laboring man took the limb to the East side police station, and from there it was carted to police headquarters.

The police are at a loss how to account for the presence of the limb in the musty old basement. Capt. Bos-worth, of the East side station, created worth, of the East side station, created something of a sensation by saying that the woman who formerly occupied the house had a trap door constructed from one of the rooms on the first floor which led into an underground passage. This passage, he said, began at one side of the basen ent and ran clear to the river. He did not know what use it was put to, but he guessed it was built for no good. Capt. Hein remarked that perhaps the artificial limb had belonged to some unfortunate fellow who onged to some unfortunate fellow who had been sent down the tunnel and dumped into the river. At any rate, the affair of the artificial limb is something of a mystery. Last fall Maj. Henderson, who was then at the head of the police department, was notified of the mysterious disappearance of a one-legged man, who had come to this city from Livingstone, Mont. Nothing was ever heard of him, and as no further news was received from Livingstone the matter was dropped and forgotten. It may be that the limb found yesterday is in some way connected with this missing man.

WILLIAM HENRY'S PRIDE. It Would Not Let Him Sign Those Resolutions.

Yesterday was the last day under the law for the approval by the mayor of the resolutions passed at the last meeting of the council. The mayor did not sign the resolutions, and they will be allowed to become operative without in regular form early next week, and that will settle it. Mayor Eustis still pretends to think that the action of the council last Friday night was illegal. It is whispered that he has evolved a plan whispered that he has evolved a plan for testing the legality of the council's action, the cases to be carried to the supreme court if necessary. The war-ants for the payment of claims against the city will be drawn in accordance with the council's resolutions, and then steps will be taken to prevent payment. This is said to be the plan. with the council's resolutions, and then steps will be taken to prevent payment. This is said to be the plan. It does not seem plausible. It will take money to carry this fight through the courts. Mayor Eustis must put up the money if the fight go on. He is almost entirely alone in the fight now. The best lawyers have said the council's action was legal. It is not likely that many Republicans will be found ready to contribute funds to gratify the stabborn mayor's whim. A large section of his party lays the blame for the overturning in the council at his door anyhow. Ever since he went into office he has shown a disposition to dictate to every department of the city government. The council grew thred and slipped from under his thumb.

It looks, anyhow, as if the mayor were weakening. Yesterday President Kiichli called on him at his invitation. They spent some time talking over council matters. Neither would say much about it, but it was learned that the mayor wanted to patch up a peace.

RABBI MARKS GOING. He Is Too Liberal for Some of His Congregation.

Rev. Samuel Marks, rabbi of Temple Shaarei Lor, the Hebrew synagogue at Fifth avenue south and Tenth street, will leave Minneapolis. Dr. Marks' severance of relations with his congregation is the result of that spirit of liberalism which pervades so many com-munions. Dr. Marks has always been exceedingly liberal in his religious yiews. His teachings became too broadly liberal, too far removed from the tradi-tions of the faith for a portion of the congregation. Insomuch as he could not be in harmony with the entire congregation, Dr. Marks thought it bet-ter to leave.
