MINNEAPOLIS. HARD AFTER BOOZERS.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Society to Meet on Tuesday.

Two Hundred Delegates to Be Present From All Parts of the World.

Yesterday's Developments in the Terrible Murder of John R. Harris.

The Races at Lake Calhoun Interfered With by a Gale.

On Tuesday will begin the twenty-second annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence society in this city. The sessions will be held at the St. Anthony of Padua hall, at the corner of Second street and Eighth avenue northeast. Two hundred delegates will be present from all parts of the state. The programme as compiled by the committee is a very complete one and embraces some very important matters. Tuesday afternoon and evening will occur the reception of delegates, and the latter part of the evening will be devoted to the regular meeting of the board of government at the hall. Wednesday morning the convention will assemble at 9:30, and at 10:30 the delegates will attend mass at the Church of St. Anthony. Solemn high mass will be celebrated at 10 o'clock, the sermon being delivered by Rev. T. J. Gibbons, spiritual director of the union. The afternoon session will be devoted to the reports of the committee on credentials and the reports of the union president and the county presidents. The standing committee will also submit their reports. At 3:30 o'clock Rev. J. J. Keane will deliver an address upon the church's loss through alcohol, which will be followed by a discussion of the same by J. O'Connor and James O'Reilly. Miss Margaret Madigan will read a paper on "Alcohol and Character," and a discussion will follow this conducted by Mrs. M. J. Barry and Thomas McElmurtrei.

LURINE REGATTA. It Is Interfered With Somewhat by a Gale.

A lively gale at Lake Calhoun yesterday threatened a disappointment to the Lurine, who had counted upon a fair day upon which to make several races of more than ordinary interest. The men and the shells were in the pink of condition, but the lake was so rough that it was necessary to double and fours, which had to encounter a rough gale and heavy waves. Later in the evening the water became smooth enough to allow one single to be raced. The first event of the afternoon was a senior double between Brown and Taylor. The former crew led from the start, although Brown and Taylor kept well behind. Bullington and Grosskopf made the best turn at the hair, and came down the stretch with the wind at their back, like a longshore breeze. The winning crew pulled with Bullington stroke and Grosskopf bow. The other crew raced with Brown at stroke and Taylor at the bow. The second event was a junior four against the senior four. The latter did not win, however, without first having to overcome a strong pull up by the juniors. The crews were as follows: Juniors, Libby bow, Brown stroke, large number two, Des Brisay third, three. Seniors, Taylor bow, Grosskopf stroke, Bullington number three, Fitzgerald number two. The juniors lost the race by about one length, the rowing was characterized by a very pretty and even stroke.

THREE MEN IMPLICATED. Police Issue a Circular Regarding the Harris Murder.

From a circular issued yesterday morning by the police department it appears that the theory of the police is that three men were implicated in the murder of J. R. Harris. The circular is as follows:

A $1,000 Reward for the Arrest and Conviction of the men who murdered J. R. Harris on the morning of June 10th last.

The reward is the lump sum offered by the mayor and a reward of $500 just offered by Gov. Nelson for the state. The governor would have made it $1,000, but there is but $500 on hand, the reward paid for the recovery of Mamie Schwartz having reduced the fund to that amount. It is quite probable that the governor will take steps to have the amount of reward increased. Circulars were sent to every town and city in the Northwest containing the descriptions given, and telegrams instructing the arrest of all suspicious characters. The detectives have been active since the tragedy occurred, and a number of important clues have developed, but what they are the police will not give out. Chief Smith is confident of capturing the murderers, and one of the detectives indicated that strong hopes were felt of finding the men. It is impossible to say how the police secured the descriptions of the three men mentioned in the circular issued, but it only strengthens the belief that they have the guilty parties in mind. It has now developed that three shots were fired by the burglars. The first shot was from the revolver in the hands of the shorter, black man of the two in the bedroom. This shot may have been the one which took effect in the bed just above the height of the pillows. The ball was from a 32-caliber weapon beyond a doubt, judged from the size of the hole made and the pieces scattered lead itself. It was either the second or third shot which proved to be the fatal one. The ball taken from the body of the dead man was from a 32-caliber revolver, and consequently the burglar who carried this weapon is the real murderer. The bullet hole in the dining room ceiling may have been made by either weapon.

From Mrs. Harris' story, the first shot was fired in the bedroom by the shorter man, who first spoke to her. Reasoning in this way, then, the taller and slighter man of the two must have been the one who carried the 32-caliber weapon. Short, thick set man, as a rule, have smaller feet than those taller and more slender in stature. The footprints found in the flower bed are those of a good-sized foot, and a foot that is larger than that of the shorter man would be expected in a man as short and thick set as the man who is thought to have fired the fatal shot. These footprints in all probability belong to the taller man, in company with a shorter man, was seen twice on the day before the murder in the vicinity of the dining room. The funeral services will be today. A large number of suspected persons were arrested last night, but all have turned out to be nothing worse than common vagrants.

TOUCHED HIS TEACHER. But She Resented It and Wanted an Apology.

A tempest in a teapot was innocently stirred up in the senior class of the high school last week, which for a time seriously threatened to disturb the harmony of the commencement exercises, but which calamity was averted by the use of good judgment. The tempest referred to was precipitated by a male member of the senior class who had a well-developed idea of fun and mirth, and who was chosen to compile the class history last year. He was a member of the senior class, and his name was George Towler, of 1319 Thirteenth street south, who unwittingly took upon a tender spot and hurt the feelings of a sensitive person, who afterwards made all the reparations he felt called upon to make. Towler in his class history hit upon a clever vein, and told the tale of the wanderings of the class through its four years of hard school work after the manner of fairy tales, or like a person in the mythical realm of the ancient gods. At the recent class night all of the seniors and a number of teachers were present to hear the wondrous tale. Each knew that on a class night he might well expect a hot spot, or perhaps a more serious matter, but he was not prepared for the sarcasm which Towler interwove into his narrative. With one exception the hot spots were blown in good grace, but in the following paragraph of the class history Towler ran against a stump and offended the teacher referred to. Quoth the class historian:

"Having assured the people that our mission was a peaceful one, they offered us the use of the palace of their queen, Emma, daughter of Trevette. We approached the palace and entered the doorway. I stood astounded. My hand stuck in my throat, and my voice stood on end, and with great reason, for there stood the queen, in size like unto a Cyclops, and as I afterward found out, neither kind in look nor pleasant in word to those who would not study. But, nevertheless, O hero, there was never a better or a more thorough teacher, or one more beloved by her pupils."

FOR HOME RULE. An Enthusiastic Meeting at the Lyceum Theater.

An enthusiastic meeting in the interests of home rule was held at the Lyceum theater last evening. A telegram was sent to Gladstone wishing him a long life. Justice Cady was one of the chief speakers of the evening. He said: "While England invaded and conquered Ireland seven centuries ago, she would not stay conquered. It soon became apparent to England that she must procure a resident population hostile to Irish interests or she would never hold the country, and so she commenced that policy which she has since used so successfully in other parts of the world. Divide and conquer. In the North of Ireland she finally succeeded, but elsewhere the Irishman always remained true to himself and his country. It is far more difficult to convert a man from his national than from his religion. It was far more difficult in most instances to convert an Irishman into an Englishman than a Protestant into a Catholic. History shows that men have often changed their religion, but they rarely turn traitor to their country except by the influence of British gold and British promises of spoils and titles. But the Irish Orangeman did turn, and for two or three hundred years has been a more rabid British Tory than any Englishman. The Orangeman has been the avowed champion of the divine rights of kings, lords, landlords and aristocrats. He is now and always has been an extreme monarchist and an enemy of all that is liberal and free except for himself and the favored few. He has always been the most illiberal and non-progressive element in the extreme wing of the Tory party in the British empire, opposing every reform and every innovation. His ideal nation is a British empire, in whose domains the sun never sets, ruled by a king, lords, landlords and aristocrats, and what have the American people to do with the battle of the Boyne? Our battle is the battle of Bunker Hill. Where was the Orangeman then? He was in the camp of King George; he was the spy, the traitor and the Judas of the cause of America. While the Catholic and Protestant fought side by side on every battlefield from Bunker Hill to the siege of Yorktown, the Orangeman remained loyal to King George, expecting to play the same game that he had so often played in Ireland, to possess himself of the confiscated estates of George Washington and Robert Morris and all the other American patriots who risked their lives and their fortunes for their country. Falling in this with the other British Tories and Benedict Arnold he left the country to the majesty's dominion, and we have had few of him since. Patrick Henry, when he said, 'Give liberty or give me death,' he was not afraid of the whelps?" The Orangeman is still the same old whelp, the same traitor to everything except British interests."

REMAINS OF THE MINNETONKA VICTIMS RISE.

Coroner Spring returned yesterday morning from Minnetonka, where he was summoned Friday night to look after the body of a man found floating between Cottagewood and Big Island. The remains were identified as those of Fred Jacobson, who was drowned some time in the past. The body was found in a bad state. The body of William Scanlan, who was drowned at the same time, was seen yesterday morning off the point of Big Island, near Cottagewood, drifting in the direction of Brown's bay. The person who saw the body merely notified the authorities without taking any steps to prevent the corpse from drifting off where it would be difficult to find, and as it is not a part of the coroner's duties to go out hunting for bodies, Coroner Spring returned to the city before Scanlan's remains had been located.

STACK MAY SUE.

A Yacht Club Wants an Example Made of the Hebe. J. L. Stack, whose boat, the Advertiser, was run into by the steamer Hebe about a week ago, has been advised by members of the Minnetonka Yacht club to make an example of the pilot of the boat. For a long time there has not been the best of feeling between the sailing and steam crews on the lake, and although the law of the land is on the side of the sailing crew, the steamers have thought all along that the sailing crew would have to be reined in by the Advertiser, however, says that this particular case was a most aggravating one, and has been advised by the members of the Minnetonka Yacht club to carry the matter into the courts and have the Hebe pilot's license revoked if possible. On the other hand, the steamboat men say that the whole affair was an accident, owing to the fact that

More St. Louis Litigation.

More litigation has sprung up on the ruins of the noted St. Louis railway company case. This is a suit brought by Hiram C. Truesdale, who represents the Philadelphia Trust Safe Deposit and Insurance company, the Germania Life Insurance company and the stockholders and trustees of these companies. Mr. Truesdale now sues his former clients to recover $3,000 said to be due him as attorney's fees in the former action.

Going to Supreme Court.

The action begun in the district court some time ago for a writ of mandamus to compel County Auditor Cooley to sign the county series of bonds, issued for raising money to finish the court house and the city hall, came up yesterday before Judge Russell. The judge said he would prefer sitting conjointly with some of the other judges before he made any decision. It was finally agreed to draw an order for the writ, and the case will at once be appealed to the supreme court, where the question of the constitutionality of the act authorizing the issue of the bonds will be settled.
