ST. PAUL'S OLD LANDMARKS

A GLANCE AT A FEW OF THE CITY'S EARLIER STRUCTURES.

Gen. Sibley's First Residence at Old St. Peter's—Early Churches of Men and Events—Gossip Sketches of Buildings Known to All—Louis Robert's Caution.

THROUGH the eyes of a stranger, a glance at St. Paul and its environs may, and no doubt will, reveal newness every where. But to the experienced eye of the Westerner—one of that unique class of men who have helped to found and build up great cities in a decade—there will always appear indications of a rather remote past, as the West goes.

There are men living in the city today who plotted through the bothersome bridle paths and waded the swamps and creeks that marked this blessed spot of ground before even a dream of such a beautiful and famous metropolis had ever crossed the mind of the most sanguine settler. There are old settlers who have seen almost every dwelling and business house erected, and even some junior pioneers can stretch their memories back to the time when the look of extreme newness was on most of the buildings pictured in the GLOBE this morning.

BABY ONE SOLID RED

Literally on Fire with Eczema. Screaming and Clawing all the Time.

Added to this were Abscesses and Suppuration.

Entirely Cured by CUTICURA. Now Stout and Healthy.

Our little baby, almost 3 years old, was taken with some form of Eczema when she was about three months old. Her whole body was one solid red from the soles of her feet to the crown of her head, and she seemed to be literally aching, screaming and clawing all the time. When she was about five months old, there was added to her affliction, abscesses and suppuration. We tried the local M. D.'s, and some other remedies without any relief. I had read considerable about the CUTICURA REMEDY, and one of our neighbors had used them, claiming that they were as good as claimed. I concluded to try them, and after the use of three or four boxes of CUTICURA, and about one and one-half boxes of the CUTICURA REMEDY, with the CUTICURA SOAP, our little one is now entirely cured, and is stout and healthy. Your CUTICURA REMEDY is all and more than you claim them to be. I always have a good word to my friends and neighbors for your excellent Remedies.

CUTICURA WORKS WONDERS

Nothing can be more encouraging to distressed parents than the remarkable cures daily effected among infants and children by the CUTICURA REMEDY. Cures in one second mean a lifetime of freedom from torturing, disgusting, humiliating humors.

Sold throughout the world. Price, CUTICURA, 50c; SOAP, 25c; REMEDY, 50c. PORTER, DRUG AND CHEM. CO., Sole Proprietors, Boston.

IT STOPS THE PAIN.

Backache, kidney rheumatism, and muscular pains relieved in one minute by the CUTICURA.

for their honored old age, the GLOBE gives the "right of line" to two of the shining landmarks of that heroic time when a grand state first began to develop from the wild but rich roaming place of the Indian. To accentuate their title to this position there is reproduced some expressions printed in the first number of the first paper ever printed on Minnesota soil, James M. Goodhue being the founder and editor. The paper was the Pioneer, dated "Saturday morning, April 28, 1857," more than a month before the territorial government was organized. A dispatch dated Harrisburg, Pa., April 4, 1859, contains, among other things, these extracts relating to a long-honored citizen of St. Paul:

HON. ALEX. RAMSEY.

I had scarcely got over the surprise of the very another excitement was produced by the intelligence communicated by the morning papers from Philadelphia that Hon. Alex. Ramsey, of this place, was appointed governor of the Territory of Minnesota (the title being set in Italic type, evidently for emphasis). The intelligence was confirmed by the reception of his commission in the same mail. I am under the impression that he will accept the appointment reluctantly.

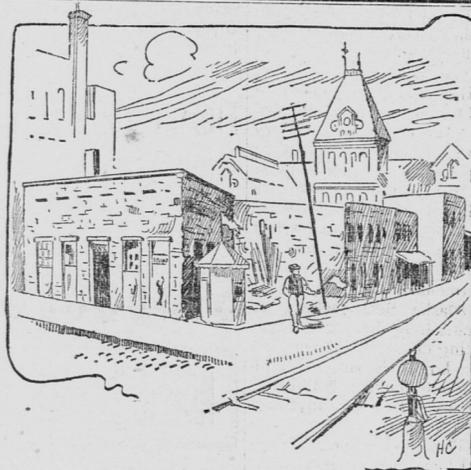

Mr. Ramsey is still a young man, not over thirty-three years of age. Ten years ago he was a journeyman house carpenter in this town. These wits who objected to Mr. Ganchy's confirmation, on the ground of "want of imposing appearance" sufficient to impress the Indians with whom he had to deal, will make that objection to the summit is attained.

HON. H. M. RICE.

In the same issue a paragraph unintentionally tells of the arrival of a man than whom no state can produce a nobler or more generally beloved. It reads as follows:

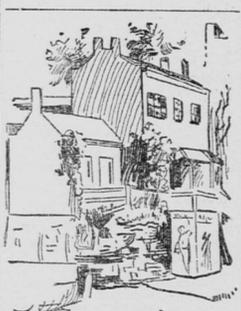

Mr. Rice, a gentleman equally distinguished for his liberality and enterprise, returned to St. Paul in the steam-the village of St. Paul grown to the magnitude of a town—every living soul in it clinging to the landing to welcome their trusty delegate. He was received with three hearty cheers, but we regret that his health is much impaired. When Mr. Sibley reached his residence at St. Peter's (Menota), six miles above St. Paul, he was seized with a very severe and dangerous illness, but is now recovering.

four-score years of age, and rendered a noble service to his state and his country during trying periods. The residence referred to above still stands at Menota, rugged and picturesque as the great man who built and occupied it. A faithful picture is herewith given. It was built in 1855-56, and is the oldest stone or wooden building standing in Minnesota of which anything is known.

In the initial letter opening this article is pictured the old Catholic church at Menota, a companion landmark. What an old landmark would have been the building in which that first Minnesota newspaper was produced. Just look through it, as here pictured: We print and issue this number of the Pioneer in a building through which out of doors is visible by more than 500 apertures; and, as for type, it is not safe from being piled on the galleys by the wind.

The GLOBE artist was unable to dig up a picture of the wondering child of the forest referred to in the next paragraph:

While we are writing a Stopt Indian has dropped into our office to look at the printing press. He expresses a great deal of curiosity and surprise. A friend who perfectly understands the Sioux language will give us a translation of what this black-haired fellow is saying about the press, for the next number.

THE TIVOLI, FOOT OF JACKSON STREET.

Another old landmark that is somewhat known in Minnesota today is R. E. Movaisforeuse, mentioned in the following paragraph, which must serve as a diagram of the name:

The Washington Whig states that of the one hundred and thirty-two removals made by the postoffice department during the past week twenty-four were for vacancies created by removals for cause.

THE OLDEST BUILDING.

There are but few people in St. Paul today who will not at once recognize the building that is now admitted to be the very oldest in the city limits. It was built for the late Louis Robert, in what year is not exactly known, and stands on the original ground. It was used for many years as a trading store, ship chandler's depot, etc. At one time there were lean-tos on the Robert street side and on the levee side, where railroad and steamboat tickets were sold.

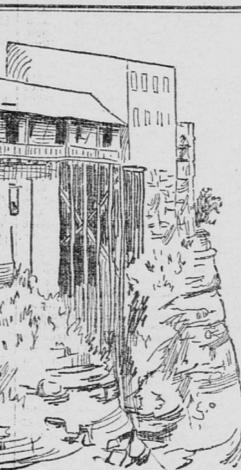

Twenty years ago Judge J. A. Chandler purchased the building and ground of Robert, for the Milwaukee road. The price agreed on was $20,000. Robert was then on what proved his deathbed, and when Chandler took up a certified check for the amount the sick man refused to accept it. So the judge posted back to the bank and returned to the sick man with an armful of bills—forty packages of $500 each. Robert accepted the money and signed the deed, though at the time he did not know he was selling to the railroad. The Milwaukee officials altered the building somewhat, putting in an additional floor and more windows. Here the station of the road was located until the completion of the union depot. Since then it has been used for general purposes, and at present is a bank shop. The old Constan's warehouse and one-time general store is also seen in the sketch and will be readily recognized as an old landmark.

CHANGED TO EXTREMES.

The view of the old Tivoli from Washington street bridge will revive many a memory in the minds of the older citizens, and be recognized as a familiar scene by the youngsters. Gen. Le Duc, of Illinois, ex-commissioner of agriculture, built the original or front part of the building in 1853, and it was the brick structure erected on the bluff, south of Third street. First used as a postoffice, St. Paul's early population visited it daily, and it was long the headquarters for news and gossip. With a chance of postmasters, a saloonkeeper got possession of the place. Next, a printing office was established in the building and the Minnesota was issued therefrom. The St. Paul Press had its birth in Le Duc's building. Through its doors went forth issues that were alive with stinging personalities, and which almost led to bloodshed. But after a while the liquid refreshment counter again replaced the type-rack, and the beer table took the place of the imposing stone. The music of the printing press, greatest instrument of civilization, is replaced by the harmony of string and wind instrument. For

GEN. SIBLEY'S FORMER RESIDENCE, AT ST. PETER'S (MENOTA).

Goodhue estate by James Goodhue, son of the pioneer editor.

STORY OF A RIVIN.

What a variegated history attaches to the old brick dwelling on the east side of Cedar, near Third! It was originally built as a private residence, and in its day was one of the best in the city. The late John X. Davidson resided there for several years. Then an excellent making shop for twelve or fifteen years, working for some of the best families. After standing vacant for a time, its quietness was disturbed and its respectability destroyed by a bevy of the demimonde. All-night orgies, tempered or fesset, and the alleged singing of razzle-dazzle visitors, gave the place a hard name. It was viewed askance by those who had crossed its threshold in other days. Public sentiment and the erection of a grander mansion finally left it vacant again for a long time. Then an umbrella mender swept out the cobwebs, replaced the broken windows in one way or another and moved in. He did not stay long and now only the ghosts of its good and bad past ascend the well known back stairway that leads from the street to the weather-stained, uninviting mansion that has been literally cut away from all its old-time surroundings. A playground for rats, home of the spider and the bug, victim of every wind that blows, in the many years Grote kept the place and catered to epicures and thirsty people. Today John Straka does likewise, with concert accompaniment. The rear portion of the building was built on the natural course of events it will soon crumble into the category of landmarks that have been and be forgotten.

A SOLDIER'S REST.

The little old frame shack with the "shovel" sign in the window is a wonder in its way. It is situated on Rossel, near Fourth, on ground belonging to the William Lindcke estate, and there it has stood for more years than most citizens can remember. It is at present occupied by a man who has not altogether forgotten his early soldierly habits, and who recites to the firemen across the way thrilling tales of the bloody days when the inspiring songs were "Success to France and England," "The Heights of Alma," and "Sebastopol." That was beyond the sea, when a grip stronger than his own fierce grip, but even the madness of the battle could not have exceeded that of the old soldier when one day he returned to his shanty and found that some vandit had covered and whitewashed everything, even to the belted and stove.
