He persuades himself that he is a man of unusually independent thought, and that if he does his duty conscientiously and to the best of his ability the adverse criticism of the public doesn't matter. But it "riles" him to be attacked on general principles.

It is 9:30 o'clock before the mayor has thoroughly digested his breakfast and all the news of the day. Then he bundles himself up and walks over to the Fifty-eighth street station of the Sixth avenue "L."

RIDES DOWN TOWN WITH BYRNES.

The mayor is quite chummy with Supt. Byrnes, and the two often ride down town together. These rides are invariably marked by a lot of questioning on the part of the mayor on police matters and the best means to Col. William L. Strong, who has bring about police reforms. Supt. Byrnes' head is full of ideas on tais subject, and he could talk for a month on it without a period.

Then there is the fashionably dressed woman who wants the mayor to subscribe to some charitable undertaking. Once in a while a quiet-looking young lady passes the big policeman at the door, and when she gets into the chair near the mayor's desk, blandly offers a subscription volume of poems at an absurdly small rate. People with complaints and boiling over with indignation rush in and out all day long. They are so wrapped up in their wrath that they are quite easily disposed of.

At 4 o'clock the mayor begins the task of going over the mair received during the day and dictating the answers. It is not often that he is able to get away from the office earlier than is o'clock, which brings him home in good time for a 6 o'clock dinner.
