GAME SCHEDULE FOR TODAY.

Indianapolis at Minneapolis. Detroit at Kansas City.

Roger Denzer held the Columbus nine down to six hits and struck out seven. That, in brief, is the story of yesterday's base ball game.

When it is said that Denzer struck out seven, it means that he struck out seven that the umpire, McDonald, allowed. To a casual observer it appeared that Roger had divers other strike-outs in reality which he did not get in the score.

But, anyway, St. Paul has another winning pitcher, and Tony Mullane no longer stands alone to be depended upon. So strong has this fact become that yesterday Tony did not appear on the players' bench at all, but in the grand stand in all the glory of an ice cream suit and polished tans.

With a favoring fortune St. Paul's score should have been much larger. The hits certainly warranted it in number, but were poorly placed in point of time.

Two were out in the first inning when Billy George drove the ball to the club house door for three bases, but Jim Burns had a hit in his bat, and Billy was left at third. Butler went to first on balls, the umpire being unable to follow the sinuous progress of the ball after it left the wily Roger's hand. Butler stole second, and Cantillon tried to sacrifice. Denzer, in his unexcitable fashion, however, appeared uncertain where he should throw the ball, so Butler had to stand pat. Roger finally threw it to first, and Cantillon went out. Wilson was ordered off the coaching line for coaching the pitcher instead of the runners. Campbell, however, sent the ball across Fuller street, and that scored Butler. Hernon was presented with a base on balls by Umpire McDonald, and Browning hit a high fly. Mertes muffed it. Hernon was caught at second, but it was close. Browning seemed a little mixed, and evidently supposed that he was out under the infield fly rule, as it was just a little back of second base, and Shugart and Mertes look much alike. The gladiator walked off the base toward the bench, and, of course, was thrown out, retiring the side.

McGregory was pitching a pretty steady game this time. Pickett and Shugart striking out, but Glascock sandwiched in a single, and Spies followed with another. It was Denzer's turn to save his own game, and he sent a two-bagger rolling through the scattered feet of Tommy Hernon, who had more voice than gumption yesterday. Tim O'Rourke kept up the good work with a single, making three runs in, when Mertes sent a long fly, which Browning gathered into himself.

Wilson was credited with a base on balls in opening the second, and Wheelock popped out to George. McCormack was given first by the umpire, and McGreevy hit an easy one to O'Rourke. Wilson thought the ball was going to first base, but, instead, it intercepted him before he reached the plate, and then he had communications with himself that were not pleasant to either of the conversationalists. Butler, however, saved Columbus' honor by hitting Denzer safely—another double—the ball out of reach of McCormack. It scored McGreevy, but the Southern leaguer was left at second when Cantillon went out.

With one out, Burns hit safely in the third, but Pickett forced him out at second. Cantillon, however, threw the ball over Campbell's head, and by the time it was taken from the wreck of the right bleacher Capt. Jack was on third base. Glascock, however, flew out to center, and the inning was at an end.

Columbus failed to reach first base. Mertes getting over with Browning by taking his hit on a long running catch.

Hollingsworth, who had taken Shugart's place in the middle of the second inning, Shugart having been hit in the face by a liner during practice, was first to bat in the fourth. He received a base, and stole second. Wheelock went under Spies' sky-scraper, and Denzer struck out, but O'Rourke hit safely, and all would have been well had not Holly tried to get home on the hit. He was caught between third and the plate. Wilson opened Columbus' half with a double, for the few hits that Columbus was getting were all of that kind, the ball going over the fence after two strikes were called. Wheelock, however, secured Cantillon, and it was a tie, but not for long, for the next man went out.

Hollingsworth opened the sixth with a strike-out, but Spies made up by driving the ball over two bases, and Denzer also struck out. St. Paul's show looked a little slim, but O'Rourke restored confidence by jumping into the right bleacher to settle a fight and then rushing to the plate in a sweat to cool off while waiting for a base on balls. Mertes went next, and instead of a base on balls he tried to beat George's three-bagger. He did not quite do it, but he made just as many bases, and Spies and O'Rourke naturally scored. George, who had been in some danger, so he proceeded to show his superiority by placing another of them in the same place by the club house where the first one went, which made one more run, although George himself was out at first. Denzer popped up a gentle one for Cantillon. Mertes, Burns and O'Rourke caught flies and Columbus again went into the field.

Pickett opened the seventh with a safe hit, but Glascock forced him out. Pickett ran into Cantillon as he threw the ball down for a double play, and it again went by Campbell, this time at his feet. While it was being collected, Pickett made third base getting a pretty hit which Hollingsworth placed just back of short. Spies forces Holly out, and Denzer in turn forced Henry out, but it was eight to four. Butler hit safely, and he was in the first, still they distributed their errors fairly well. Scheibeck was responsible for three misplays, but he also made some good double plays unassisted, and he batted like a field.
