with the obstruction of law and with the destruction of property and life. That which has happened may happen again. The same man is a candidate for governor of the same state today.

Were he, or such as he, to be successful, with a man in the white house pledged to abide by the Chicago platform, then the state in question could go out of the Union, to all intents and purposes, as effectively as South Carolina did at the opening of the rebellion.

Every mail train could be stopped, interstate commerce could be brought to a standstill, riot might rule supreme throughout the territory of the commonwealth, every federal law might be broken and defied and there would be no redress, because the government could not act without a summons from the state executive.

This is what men mean when they charge the Chicago convention with endorsing anarchy. It is a potent possibility and a present menace. It is a thousand times more than enough to warrant the defeat of Mr. Bryan, even if he stood on a platform ideally representative of sound doctrines on tariff and currency reform.

The American people are not yet ready to permit that to be accomplished by the ballot which they spent life and treasure to prevent by the bayonet a generation ago.

THE COUNTY TICKET. Those who have observed the fusion principle in practical operation in the past are seldom sanguine or enthusiastic when a repetition is proposed.

The Globe says frankly that, as far as the work of yesterday's conventions is concerned, it would probably have been better done all around if each of the parties participating had acted wholly for itself, without an attempted division of the offices.

Notwithstanding this, however, the ticket put in nomination yesterday is one that will, in nearly every respect, more than bear comparison with that nominated by the Republicans.

As the campaign progresses to its close the shifting of issues goes on, and all the great questions that are involved in this election begin to assume their true relative importance.

and key is a way of doing things that is peculiarly Massachusetts' own. The event recalls its precedent, when Ben Butler ran things instead of George Fred Williams, a more picturesque figure, too, by the way.

It was by a singular coincidence, in 1878, when the national Democracy was enjoying one of its infrequent excursions into the political domain of the other parties, as it now is, off for a jaunt for its health, which was somewhat run down by its arduous labors on its own preserves, that Ben Butler and the state committee were at outs.

Ben had been a Democrat and then a Republican, becoming naturally a Greenbacker, and sought to convert Democracy to it and, quite incidentally, to obtain the governorship for himself. It is quite noteworthy how closely the welfare of the people is usually bound up with the political fortunes of such men.

Butler was capturing the primaries and county conventions, and the state committee issued a manifesto declaring that no one was eligible to a seat as delegate who favored the nomination for governor of any man not a recognized member of the Democratic party.

At daybreak of the day of the convention Butler's forces rallied around the convention hall with scaling ladders and mounted to the windows, opened them and took possession. Williams, it will be noted, showed the Germanic earnestness of a public meeting, although his men were "bottled up" in the hall as effectively as Butler was at Dutch Gap thirteen years before.

The state committee appealed to the mayor to use the police to oust the Butlerites, but the latter assured him that they would whip the police, and they were permitted to hold the hall and nominate Butler. The regulars repaired to old Faneuil hall, held their convention, nominated a Democrat, and the result was that Butler was handsomely and deservedly defeated.

THE FOREIGN VOTE. here and disposes in a great measure of what has been the Democratic vote. The knife will be used to cut the party for sound money, protection, and a few Scandinavian, but in the southern part of the district, they are numerous.

THE FUSION BANNER

Continued From First Page. fact that he has too much at stake to take any chances on the silver people, who he knows he is butting his prejudices, but he seems to be quite convinced that there is

NO POSSIBLE HOPE for anybody not running on the sound money ticket in this county and district. "If the rest of the state is as well taken care of as this county, they be," said Capt. Van Sant, "there need be no alarm felt for the outcome. Silver will have no followers where the people are prosperous, and that is what they are in this part of the state."

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE IS CONSIDERING A VISIT TO ST. PAUL. THE GENERALS IN DEMAND. NORTHWEST STATES CLAMORING FOR BOTH BUCKNER AND THE ILLINOIS SENATOR.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—The National Democratic committee is considering the advisability of sending Senator Palmer and Gen. Buckner through the Northwest on a special train. So many requests have been received for speeches from the veteran candidates, particularly from points in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa, that the national committee concluded the only way to meet these requests was to send Gen. Palmer and Buckner to these states on a special train.

HEIRS OF CAPT. CARVER. Revive a Claim That Has Long Lain Dormant. Heirs of the estate of Capt. Jonathan Carver, now residing at or near Napoleon, Ohio, have started up the usual question as to the title of the city of St. Paul and suit will soon be commenced at the town named.

Why Did She Change? Strange Antics of a Sixth Street Girl. It may have been all right, but it looked funny, very funny. Three cyclists, two of them young men, and the other a young lady, were riding down Sixth street from Robert street, and when in the shadow of the great New York building the young lady's wheel, which was denly wheeled up to the curb, rested on a dainty foot thereon, and said in a nervous tone:
