THE SAME OLD APPEAL. Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, the Tammany fighter, returned from a continental trip the other day, and in an interview on the main issue of the campaign, said: "It is a moral question. I like to repeat the lesson of my experience with popular appeals in politics, that there is a sound moral feeling in the people to which we can look with absolute faith, and by which we can win victories. That is the way the successes in municipal politics have been won. The advocates of reform simplified their issue down to its moral form of statement, and the great body of voters understood it and could not withstand that plea, honesty, good faith, fair dealing, the right. I believe the South and West are reacting because they are beginning to perceive that what was demanded in their name was not an honorable thing to ask for."

It was not to be expected that the Republican party would put the issue on so high a plane as that taken by the famous New York reformer. It is not a line of appeal that it has been accustomed to ever since it achieved its first victory in the contest with slavery. Since then its constant appeal has been to the fears, the prejudices and the selfishness of men. It thrives on the fear of the "rebel brigadiers," it fattened on the prejudices aroused by the war, and it grew corpulent on the material wealth it gave the manufacturers and promised the wage earners and farmers. In this fatal campaign it pursues the same line of persuasion. It preaches the doctrine of rewards and punishments. It alternately tries to frighten and coax with promises of spoils. It "frys the fat" from corporations to get the means to preach in press and on hustings the gospel of gross, unmitigated selfishness. That there is a question of morals, of simple right, of plain honesty one never hears from them, save when some man like Parkhurst sounds the note. "Put money thou canst. Thy art sure of me; go make money." The spirit of Iago inspires Republicanism today as it did that conspirator when he counseled Roderigo.

True to its instincts of gain and self, instead of meeting the proposition to debate the currency, that debtors may defraud their creditors, with the rebuke that it is dishonest, and appealing to the moral sense of men to reject the dishonorable proposal, it argues the details of gain or loss as if they were the only things to be considered. But, as in all cases of appeals to the selfishness of men, the gains promised some involve loss to others. For government has no resources except those drawn from the people, and what it gives to some it must take from others. The wealth given the beneficiaries of tariff protection comes from the pockets of the consumers. The bounties given sugar planters comes from earnings of the people. For a time consumers and earners may be deluded by visions of compensations, but it is only for a time; the sham is sure to be discovered sooner or later.

The impolicy of policy is clearly shown in the reactions of the appeals the Republicans make to the voters to sustain the gold standard. On the one hand they point out to the wage-earning classes of the country the inevitable effects on them of a depreciated currency. Wages will advance but slowly, while the purchasing power of the money will rapidly decline. The prices of everything will rise. Flour, wheat, meats, potatoes, all the products of the farm, will be measured in the cheaper money, and be dearer because the money with which they are paid for is of less value. This is true enough, but it has two edges, and cuts both ways. The farmer reads the arguments addressed to the artisan to convince him that he should help maintain the gold standard, and finds in them the strongest inducement to vote to substitute the silver standard. The only grievance he has with the low price of the produce he has to sell. He is told by Mr. Bryan that this is because its value is measured by the gold standard, and that the price will rise when the silver standard is substituted. He might not accept this as true were it not confirmed by the arguments the Republican uses to win to the gold standard the votes of the wage-earners. These convince him. His selfishness is appealed to by the counter conclusions drawn from the appeal to the workmen. If, he concludes, it is to be merely a game of grab, I cannot see why I should not have my chance in it. Put on that ground, we cannot see that the farmer is to be blamed for looking out for his interest as well as the artisan for his. To be sure he takes a short-sighted, a one-sided view of the case. He sees only his advantages as a seller, and overlooks the attendant and compensatory disadvantages as a buyer; but men mostly look on that side of their transactions and regard it as the more important.

The proposed free coinage of silver at any but the ratio of the markets is not right. It is dishonest to propose to the man who owes a chance to scale his debt 50 per cent by debasing the money with which it is paid. It is not right or honest to propose to a producer a plan for getting for 50 cents' worth of product a coin that he can force creditors to take for 100 cents. It is not right for a government to attempt to increase the price of any product by legislation. It is not right for a government to attempt to obstruct the natural processes of evolution, whether they relate to money or social or economic conditions. It is not right to reverse the wheels of progress and return commerce to conditions grown out of centuries ago. All this is not right; therefore it is not Democratic.

THE EXTENSION OF THE LOOP. There are three points of view from which the question of extending the loop of the street railway down Fifth to Broadway and thence to Eighth street may be considered; in two of which it has been fully presented by the advocates of extension and retention. The first of these is that held by those interested in retaining the loop in its present location, including those who have a direct financial interest, as well as those whose interest is less material. The second point is of the same nature, and is held by those who would be, or think they would be benefited either financially or in a matter of convenience by the extension. The third point of view, and the only one which the Globe can take, is the interests of the general public of the city. Will they be any better served by extending the loop as proposed? If so then no personal interests of individuals in either section should be permitted to stand in the way. Railways are intended for general, not private benefit. Taking this view, we are convinced that the weight of reason is on the side of the retention of the loop as it now is, until, at least, conditions materially change from those existing to others that may develop in the future growth of the city. That is not a present question, and the other is, and it should be determined by a consideration of conditions as they now are. What are the interests of the general public as connected with a street railway system and how can that system best serve it? Clearly it is to convey people from the remotest portions of the city to those centers where the purposes of their visits can be the most readily and expeditiously accomplished. Of these there are two classes, those who come in to their daily work and those who come in to make the daily purchases for the household. From the former class we have heard nothing to indicate that they are not well served by the present system, the transfers making any portion of the center of the city accessible. For the latter class it is clear that the lines from the outskirts should converge and surround that portion of the city where the retail trade of the city has established itself, and where, within the smallest radius, shoppers can find the various articles they are in search of. Whether that center is located because of the location of the lines or not is immaterial to the view we take of the question. That it is associated with the present status is, as far as our view is concerned, a coincidence. Should that center ever shift, as it has shifted to some other portion of the city, we should insist upon the change of the loop to accommodate those wishing to reach the retail center, as, for the same reason, we now urge the retention of the present loop.

Of the arguments made for the extension the only one that falls within the point of view taken by the Globe is that it will enable persons intending to take the train to get, without changing car, two blocks nearer the depot than at present. We have heretofore urged the construction of a loop that would permit the cars to receive and discharge passengers at and not within two blocks of the depot, and we believe that this is a necessary improvement that should not be endangered by the concession that would be claimed to have been made were the proposed extension of the loop granted. We would have the public better served than this argument contemplates. So far as the employees of the district to be served by the extension are concerned, aside from the fact that they are a small portion of the general public, all parts of the city are now made accessible to them by the cable line on Fourth and the Mississippi and Rondo and Lafayette lines operating on Fifth street with transfers to all connecting lines. It is for these reasons that the Globe is of the opinion that the loop should remain as it is.

ENFORCEABLE ANTI-TRUST LAWS. John Sherman wires the New York World: "No doubt the existing anti-trust law can be enforced by a president and vigorous attorney general in sympathy with him." That law was enacted July 2, 1890, with Mr. Harrison president for nearly three years following. His attorney general instituted the suits brought against the sugar trust that resulted in a decision that the act was not applicable to that trust. Mr. Olney anticipated this decision in his report, in which he pointed out the inadequacy of the act. Mr. Sherman's comment is a severe criticism, if well taken, on President Harrison and his attorney general. But it is not well laid. The president and his legal adviser have nothing to do with the enforcement of the act other than to bring the actions and procure the evidence. Whether the offense is proved, whether the acts established fall within the act or not, is a question they have no jurisdiction of. That rests exclusively with the courts, and they have decided that the act of 1890 is not sufficient to reach the trusts. It was more than suspected at the time of its passage that it was not intended to be, and that it was merely a sop thrown out to quiet a sentiment that was becoming dangerous. The suspicion found confirmation in the failure of the suits brought and as vigorously pushed as it was possible to press them.

But if the law of the United States cannot reach trusts located in a state and doing business within it the people are not remedied. The action of the attorney general of Illinois in the whisky case and that of the authorities of New York in the milk combination and other trust cases show that the state is sufficiently armed. There is no state in which the attorney general cannot bring and prosecute to final judgment actions against any trust that does business within its borders. Every law authorizing the creation of corporations, and they cannot exist without such authorization, only permits their formation for lawful purposes. Every trust and combination is unlawful, not only under statutory, but under the common law. The attorney general of any state could, if he cared to, bring quo warranto against any corporation in the state that is a member of a trust or combination either to restrict trade or control prices, to show cause by what right it transacted such business within the borders of the state. What amount of sense it is to be passing anti-trust laws that amount to nothing when simple and ample remedies are at hand to be effectively applied by any attorney general of any state. The act of 1890 is a farce if it was not intended as a fraud. The limitations on the power of congress, the complex relations of the states with the nation, render it, extremely difficult to devise an adequate remedy that will not infringe on the reserved rights of the states. But these latter have a redress in their own law if they have attorney generals plucky enough to apply it.

AT THE THEATERS. With a matinee this afternoon and a performance evening, Mathews and Bulger will close what has proved to be the most prosperous farce comedy engagement in the history of the Grand opera house, if not of St. Paul theatrics. "Gay Conny Island" will ever be remembered by the lovers of bright comedy in this city.

Tomorrow night at the Grand will commence the engagement of Eddie Fay in the great transcontinental railway. This operatic travesty "Off the Earth." This creation is from the pen of John D. Gilbert and is credited to his reconstructed state with being one of the best travesties of the day. The previous extravaganza have given Mr. Fay splendid success. The matinee, in this play he has been particularly happy.

"In Mizoura," Augustus Thomas' great American drama, will begin a week's engagement at the Metropolitan opera house tomorrow night. The play is presented by the same company of players, headed by A. S. Lipman, a well-known St. Paul favorite, and in the hands of this talented organization a first-class production is assured. The sale of seats is now open, and seats will ever be very important matters and secured at the box office.

Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead" is underlined for the week of Oct. 18, following "In Mizoura."
