WILL INVEST GOLD

IN IMPROVEMENTS IN RAILROADS IN THE NORTHWEST AT AN EARLY DATE.

FOREIGN CAPITAL COMING.

IT HAS ONLY BEEN HELD BACK PENDING THE POLITICAL CRISIS.

RE-STEEL THE GREAT WESTERN.

Ansel Oppenheim Will Leave in a Few Days to Negotiate a Large Loan.

The election of William McKinley and the maintenance of the sound money principles is expected to have a marked influence on railroad investments and improvements. It has been known for some time that several of the leading lines running into the Twin Cities were awaiting a favorable result of the election to decide a number of important matters. It is believed that the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern will soon make extensive investments all along their respective lines, especially on the Pacific coast.

NEW COAST TARIFFS

Will Be of Benefit to Western Slope Jobbers.

The new transcontinental tariff sheet adopted by the roads in connection with last week's meeting of the North Pacific coast line ready for distribution among shippers, and the tariffs will be sent out today. The general results of the meeting have already been printed in the Globe. The lines interested were the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Canadian Pacific, Union Pacific, Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, Burlington & Missouri River and the Soo. The new tariffs were based on those in effect upon the Southern Pacific, or Sunset route from Atlantic seaboard points to South Pacific points, and were made for the purpose of meeting the competition of the latter line. The new tariffs will enable the North Pacific coast business firms to stand on a more equitable footing by the side of those on the Southern Pacific coast. The cause for the reduction by the North Pacific lines are familiar to all.

The new tariff sheet comprises thirty-six pages, and rates are shown upon over 2,500 different commodities from Atlantic points to the North Pacific coast points. St. Paul and intermediate territory has been previously stated, is not affected by the tariff. The eastern boundary line of the territory affected is the Atlantic coast. The western boundary practically is a line drawn from north to south through Buffalo, N. Y., running as far south as Virginia, to North Carolina. The tariffs affect consignments from the above territory to the following terminals: via the Canadian Pacific, to Seattle, Everett, Fairhaven, New Whatcom, Lowell and Snohomish, Wash.; via the Northern Pacific to Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Olympia, Everett, Lowell and Snohomish; via the Great Northern, the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, the Union Pacific, to Seattle, Everett, Fairhaven, New Whatcom, Lowell and Snohomish, Wash.; via the Northern Pacific to Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Olympia, Everett, Lowell and Snohomish; via the Great Northern, the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, the Union Pacific, to Seattle, Everett, Fairhaven, New Whatcom, Lowell and Snohomish, Wash.

DRIVEN TO SUICIDE

FAILING HEALTH IMPELS JACOB W. SOWDERS TO SELF DESTRUCTION.

HE HAD CALMLY PREPARED

ALL HIS AFFAIRS FOR THE TRAGIC END HE HAD CONTEMPLATED.

LEFT HIS STORE TO HARDICK, Manager of the Minnesota News Co., Who Will Be Named as Administrator.

Jacob W. Sowders, proprietor of a cigar and news store at 114 East Seventh street, killed himself at his place of business yesterday noon by shooting a bullet from a revolver into his head. Sowders had gone at the thing in a methodical and careful way and intended that there should be no failure. His assistant in the store, Lenard Horton, went to dinner at 12 o'clock as was his usual practice. As soon as he was gone Sowders locked the front and rear doors and placing a chair in a corner where he could not be seen from the street, seated himself in it. He placed the muzzle of a 38 caliber Smith & Wesson revolver to the right side of his head and pulled the trigger. In placing the chair in which he killed himself in position he was careful to do it so that he would not fall on the floor after shooting himself.

The suicide was not discovered until 1 o'clock when Norton came back from dinner. He was surprised to find the store locked and several customers waiting at the door. Norton had left his key apparently in the best of spirits and not for a moment investigating anything of the kind unlocked the door and entered the store, followed by the customers. Seated on the chair was Sowders, cold in death, with the weapon which had ended his existence grasped in his right hand. His head was thrown back on the top of the chair, and his staring eyes seemed to be fixed on the ceiling of the room. Patrolman Casey was notified of the suicide and took possession of the store until the arrival of Coroner Whitcomb. A note found by that official under date of Nov. 4, read as follows: "W. Sowders: Let Harry, of the Minnesota News Company, have charge of the store. He is the best man for you to trust. P. S.—Don't fail to give the papers Harry Hardick."

The body was removed to Dampier's undertaking rooms at 114 East Seventh street, the corner decided an inquest was unnecessary. Sowders had resided in St. Paul for the past twenty years, and for fifteen years has been engaged in business here. He had a large circle of friends and acquaintances, and was well liked by those whom he came in contact with. He leaves a wife and daughter. The remains will be taken to his late residence, 831 Agate street, and there will be a funeral on Friday afternoon. The funeral will be held at 10 o'clock a. m. today.

MRS. O'BRIEN DEAD.

Prominent Woman of Stillwater Passed Away Yesterday.

News reached St. Paul yesterday of the death of Mrs. James O'Brien, wife of ex-State Senator O'Brien, of that city. Mrs. O'Brien died suddenly. The funeral will be held this morning in St. Michael's church. A train leaves over the Omaha from the union depot this morning at half past 8 o'clock for the accommodation of any who desire to attend the funeral.

RUSSIANS WORSHIP A NEW SAINT.

His Remains Said to Be Incorruptible and Reverenced by the Orthodox.

What orthodox Russians regard as a great event, and one which must have a curious interest for Frenchmen, has just taken place at Chernigoff, a town of about 50,000 inhabitants in South Russia. It is the canonization of a correspondent of the London Standard as "the officially sanctioned 'invention' of the incorruptible remains of Archbishop Theodosius," who died 200 years ago.

The Russian Greek church, he says, recognizes, in addition to the various forms of the Roman Catholic and the Roman Catholic faith, a symbol of higher sanctity than any in the so-called "moshchi," a word apparently signifying "divine" power. These "moshchi" are to be found in all the principal churches throughout the empire, and are the objects of especial veneration.

Every traveler in Russia will recall having seen in the churches a number of tombs, usually without lids, but covered with glass, through which may be discerned the figures of men in rich vestments and covered, as a rule, from head to foot. The hands are usually raised in the air, and a portion of the right arm is extended, as if in the size of a shilling on the forehead, are left to appear through the coverings of their prayer robes, and their hands are to be seen in the air above.

The Russian church teaches that very few men during the present age have attained to the state of incorruptibility after death by the fact that the corpses of such, however long they have lain in the earth, and notwithstanding the usual decay of the earth in which they die, damp or dry, cold or heated, may, even if exposed to the sun, retain their original appearance above ground, be devoured by any trace of corruption. The garments of the dead almost invariably retain their color sometimes, share in this manifestation of indestructibility.

These "incorruptible remains" are very numerous throughout Russia, but of late years few of them have been found, as the holy synod and the emperor now cause more strict investigation to be made into the details of each case than in former days. It is not sufficient that these remains should be found, but they must be accompanied by a manifest wonder-working power.

The usual order of things is for some devout person to see, generally by a dream, the figure of a saint, who bids him search for his (the saint's) body in a certain place. The body is then found, and is chiefly of the healing kind, and is carefully recorded, with such detail and corroboration as seem proper to the local authorities on the spot. After a longer or shorter lapse of time the clergy made application for the canonization of their saint and miracles are considered satisfactory.

The "incorruptible remains" of the holy synod, which, if the proofs and miracles are considered satisfactory, are then placed in a casket, and after a day is then appointed and preparations are made for the great event.

In the present instance the ceremonies lasted five days and drew over a hundred thousand people to the little town, which is a long distance from any railway. The saint's body was carried in a coffin, and two regiments of infantry, with two squadrons of Cossacks, were dispatched to the spot to prevent the possible recurrence of the Moscow disaster. The services concluded on Sept. 21, after a day's prayer for preparatory services. The "moshchi" were then carried to the cathedral at 8 o'clock in the evening, through crowds of pilgrims, each of whom bore a lighted taper. At the same hour services were held and the bells rung in the Moscow churches and throughout Russia.

The Moscow papers report several miraculous cures by the new saint among the highest classes as well as among the poor. The saint now resides in a silver sarcophagus weighing over 300 pounds and valued at $20,000. This is only one of the numerous and costly offerings which were dispatched to Chernigoff on the great occasion.

The belief in these "incorruptible remains" is peculiar to the orthodox Russian faith. The "old believers" and other dissenting Russian sects reject it and it is not held, for example, by so nearly allied a faith as that of the Armenians. It is scarcely necessary to say that in these days not all even of the orthodox give full credence to this marvel, but the vast mass of the population undoubtedly sincere in the devout veneration they pay to these extraordinary symbols of the czar's reign.

New York Herald. He strangely fitting clothes, and his made-up neck scarf proclaimed him to be from the country. He walked into a Fifth avenue house decorating establishment one day last week and gazed in a bewildered way, at the hangings, the stamped leather and the antique furniture.

"What the dentist's chair, I s'pose," he said, pointing to a lot of four-legged furniture over in a corner. "Style of Louis Quatorze," replied the nice young clerk, as he put an extra touch to his very superior hair. "What style, young man," replied the man with the made-up neck scarf. "I don't know," replied the clerk. "I don't know," replied the man with the made-up neck scarf. "I don't know," replied the clerk. "I don't know," replied the man with the made-up neck scarf.

Snake Up a Tree.

Jeremiah Coyle, of Homesville, had an encounter with a snake on the mountain above Frog Hollow yesterday. He was out for chestnuts, and started to climb when he saw a snake in a hole. He was in a hole when he was startled by seeing the snake not three feet away, swinging to and fro from a slender branch, and evidently preparing to spring. Coyle braced himself in a notch of the tree, and hurled the hatchet he carried in his hand with deadly accuracy, severing the head from the writhing body.

Will's Fear.

Philadelphia Times. "Why didn't you go out with the sailing party yesterday?" "No," answered the little fellow, "my mamma went along, and I heard papa say that he had that was a spanking breeze on the bay."

Highly in Earnest.

Indianapolis Journal. "Much free silver sentiment out this way?" asked the reporter of the great occasion. "No," echoed Rubberneck Bill. "Much?" "Why, friend, it has got so that every time a fellow has the time-jaw instead of imaginary snakes in his boots, he thinks his pockets is full of gold, twenties."

A Mean Trick.

Cincinnati Enquirer. "I notice your wife didn't go to the lake this summer." "No, I couldn't afford it." "What is just what I told my wife, but you may remember that she went just the same." "I didn't tell my wife. I got a hotel type-writer to address an envelope to me in a nice feminine hand and then dropped it into my pocket at home."
