

Social St. Paul

dark blue velvet coat, white satin breeches and vest embroidered in gold.

The pretty candlestick has become a fixed feature of the up-to-date tea table, to say nothing of the boudoir or dainty parlor. It is a dainty bit of an ornament, too, when lighted, and from that fact, as well as its use, has come to have consideration shown it. Fetching little affairs are being made nowadays by dressing up with colored tissue paper common tin candlesticks with candles to match.

The coming week ushers in Ash Wednesday on which day all extensive entertaining is supposed to cease, for even among those who belong neither to the Catholic or the Episcopal churches, Lent is observed more or less and is utilized as a time for rest from social duties by those who are not themselves church people. Clubs and societies have things about their own way during the Lenten period, and all kinds of hard study and application to matters deep are supposed to be indulged in by the devout club woman.

Mrs. R. S. White gave a euchre party Wednesday afternoon at her home on Marshall avenue. Ten tables were played. The decorations were in pink and white. Those assisting were: Mrs.

during supper. The guests came in colonial dress. Mr. and Mrs. Rundlett received as Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll, of Carrolltown. The latter's gown was of a soft blue material with train and a Watteau pleat. The front was of cream silk brocaded with huge red roses. Diamonds and old lace completed the handsome costume, the former being 200 years old. Mr. Rundlett's costume was of black velvet with knee breeches, silken hose and shoes with big silver buckles. His vest was embroidered in white and the lace he wore had seen over 100 years.

Mrs. J. F. Fulton made a most charming Lady Washington in a heavy black brocade cut low in the neck with a rare old lace kerchief across the shoulders and garnet ornaments. She wore her hair high and powdered. Dr. MacDavitt was George Washington in coat and knee breeches of wine velvet, bold embroidered and deep ruffles and tie.

Mrs. MacDavitt was Deborah Champlion Gilbert and wore a handsome gown of heavy cream satin with train, rich point lace and diamonds. In her hair she wore a most beautiful butterfly, whose body was an inch long and contrived of a single opal. The long wings were a mass of diamonds. Rukard Hurd came as Gen. Greene in a black cloth costume, belt, sword, cockade hat and trimmings of gold braid.

Mrs. Hurd was Mrs. Greene in a handsome black moire gown, lace kerchief, etc. On her arm she carried an embroidered handbag containing an antique bottle of smelling salts.

Mrs. Schurmeier wore an exquisite empire gown of cream India mull and jacket of antique lace. On her head was perched a picture hat, which she took off occasionally and used for a fan. It was made out of a palm leaf fan and had the handle still attached. Trimmed as it was with plumes it was exceedingly chic.

Henry Schurmeier was Robert Morris in a green velvet suit, white satin vest, with gold embroidery. Mrs. George Finn and Mrs. Patrick Henry wore a gown of gold and bronze Irish poplin, with Watteau pleat of green and trimmings of heavy gold fringe and braid, diamonds and ermine.

George Finn wore a royal purple costume braided with gold. Mrs. William Rhodes as Betsy Ross, the maker of the first American flag, wore an empire gown of cream muslin, veiling and wide rose-colored sash. On her head she wore a picture hat of Leghorn trimmed with rose ribbons and pink flowers. Long silken mitts and topaz jewels completed one of the most charming costumes of the evening.

William Rhodes as John Adams wore a dark blue velvet suit braided with gold.

Mrs. E. Atwater as Dorothy Quincy wore white antique silk, a gown which had been in the family for years. On her shoulders she wore a scarf over 175 years old. The scarf was beautiful three yards long and a yard wide, with heavy embroidery at each end.

E. Atwater was Uncle Sam in conventional costume representing the same. Miss Barry came as Emily Harper in a white silk brocade with pink roses, old lace handkerchief and Oriental topaz pin.

Mr. Munster was Gen. Lafayette in a

THE SMALL BAY WHO COASTS BEHIND.

Sing ho for the winter with ice and with snow!
Sing ho for the evergreen holly!
Sing ho for the maidens with cheek all aglow!
The fairest of all is my Molly!
Each night we drive out in a cutter with furs,
The moon o'er the snow seems to blind us
To all of the world, till it sudden occurs
There's a small boy a-coasting behind us.

The shimmers of moon over stretches of snow,
The crunch of the crust as we're speeding,
Seems to chord with your heart till the first thing you know
The cause of a lover you're pleading,
I know that with Molly and me that's the way,
Since Cupid to love first inclined us,
But there's always a rope to the back of our sleigh
And a small boy is coasting behind us.

I worship my Molly, I feel she loves me,
And long I have vainly been praying
That those little scampings would for once let me be
While out in the moonlight we're sleighing,
If fate would be kind in my manifold woes,
We'd plight all the troths that would blind us;
But, goodness! I never can get to propose,
With a small boy a-coasting behind us.

—Roy Farrell Greene.
