REPORT OF GRAND SECRETARY

Assets, Receipts and Relief Work of the Past Year.

The annual meeting of the grand lodge of Odd Fellows will be held in Minneapolis the second Wednesday in June, and the session promises to be one of the most eventful in the history of the order. The election of grand lodge officers was to a large extent thrown into the grand lodge session the Australian ballot election in the ubordinate lodges failing to elect in everal instances. On this account there will be considerable interest attaching to the contests, and there may be an attempt to repeal the present law pro-

On account of business depression the order has not shown any remarkable growth the past year, but there has been a healthy increase, the number of initiates being 1,212, and the net gain was 200. Among the reports to be submitted will be that of Grand Secretary A. L. Bolton, who is re-elected.

His report to Jan. 1, 1897, is as follows:

The pace set by the Assignee Sale of the Century Piano Stock is a Very Hot One.

It has thrown a lot of dust in the eyes of the local music trade. That result is a little bit unfortunate, but it can't be helped. No one expects a regular dealer to maintain as swift a gait as the assignee. He just simply can't. He must just HANG ON AND WAIT until the assignee gets through, when the dust clears away and he has an open track.

260 PIANOS AND ORGANS IN 60 DAYS

Is the speed the Assignee Sale has maintained. The race is rapidly drawing to a close. The court in timates that, for the protection of local trade interests, the sale should be brought to a close and all stock on hand May 1st sold, in a lump, to the highest bidder. Bids have been advertised for, and on the evening of Friday, April 30th, the last sales at retail will be made. That leaves just seventeen days for the piano buyer to take advantage of the greatest ASSIGNEE SALE of musical goods that has ever occurred in the Northwest. If buyers are wise there will be a very slim stock on hand May 1st for the dealers to purchase. To give you some idea of what you may yet find in the way of bargains a few

ANGLO CONTINENTAL,

LARGE NUMBER OF AMERICANS TO VISIT EUROPE THIS YEAR.

GOLD TO EUROPE.

THIS YEAR'S VISITORS ALONE WILL LEAVE $100,000,000 OVER THERE.

INQUIRIES FOR PASSPORTS

Traveling Americans and Their Peculiarities-Oddities of Consuls. .

Special Correspondence of the Globe. WASHINGTON, April 8.—They tell me at the passport office of the state department that the exodus of Americans to Europe this year is going to be greater than usual. Many men who were kept at home last summer because of the election uncertainty are going across this year, and they are going to take an enormous amount of American gold with them. Gen. Horace Porter, our new ambassador to France, told me when he was here a few days ago that he estimated the amount of money our people will spend abroad this summer at $100,000,000 equal to our standing gold reserve. No wonder we have a struggle keeping gold on this side of the ocean.

The number of travelers taking pass ports is comparatively small, but it varies with the volume of travel. Going on a short trip in the beaten track of trourists it is not necessary for the traveler to take a passport, but he sometimes finds it convenient to have one. In Russia, in Egypt and in other countries less generally visited by Americans, it is quite necessary to have a passport. The state department would prefer very much to issue a passport to every one of the tens of thousands of travelers who cross the Atlantic every summer. A passport is a sure identification of the man who holds it, and if the man gets into trouble the great seal of the state department usually assures him respectful treatment. This saves the state department a great deal of trouble. If the man has no passport and cannot make the local authorities understand who he is, he is likely to be outraged through ignorance or stupidity, and then the department has a claim for apologies and damages to press. Our consuls and ministers and ambassadors have their hands full most of the time keeping up with the procession of indignant

The people of Europe are rather ar gant sometimes in their enforcement of laws and local regulations, but they are far less severe with the stranger than with their own people, and the reason for this is found in the fact reason for this is found in the fact that the traveling American is a peren-nial boon to all the countries of Eu-rope. In Great Britain there is an-other reason. Chauncey M. Depew, who came very near being our ambassador at London under this administra-tion, told me recently that there was a feeling of affection for us in the hearts of Englishmen which few Americans can understand—a feeling of kinship ican consuls are to be believed, the most offensive display of boorishness that is possible in a people not wholly uncivilized. A senator who has been across several times said recently: "Where do all the nice Americans go in summer? You never meet them travworse abroad than we are at home. Secretary John Sherman, when he was a senator, made two trips across the water. He tells of meeting on one of these trips two nice American men of good breeding and refined tastes who attracted unpleasant attention in the smoking room of a hotel by boasting loudly about their country and abus-ing every other country and its people. They finally found themselves alone, and then they grew hilarious over their success in cleaning out the place. They had made themselves disagreeable purposely so as to drive away some Englishmen who were occupying the best places in the room. Another gentleman, a well-known newspaper editor, told me of a meeting with a fellow countryman in a Paris hotel. The man approached a party of Americans. "You're from the United States." he said. "So am I. haven't any cards with me, but that's my name." And he drew out a national bank note and placed his thumb nail on the signature of the president of the bank. He wanted his fellow countrymen to know how important a person he was at home. Doubtless he had done the same boastful, silly thing with strangers from other countries. It is the way of too many American tourists. They are boisterous, bragging. They carry the American eagle on their shoulders and shove it under the nose of every one they meet.

But there are many kinds of Americans just as there are many kinds of Englishmen. We make the same mistake in judging the Chinese. In every city but Washington the cooly laborer or laundryman is taken as the typical Chinaman, while the people here who have met the noblemen of the Chinese legation know that they are of quite another class. Missionaries who have visited China will tell you that we get the very scum of her population. But we differ from China and from England and from every other great nation in this—we do not send repre sentative Americans always to repre sent us officially at foreign capitals. We have been peculiarly fortunate in our ministers and ambassadors at Lon don, Paris and Vienna. But many o our ministers at other capitals have been mere politicians, and our consuls general and consuls have been, if anything, worse. I don't mean to sneer at the politician if he is anything else. But we should not send abroad men who are politicians only, men who lack business and social standing, educa-tion and refinement. The English government would never send a farmer to act as consul general at New York might give him a special mission to examine our agricultural resource and honor him in other appropriat ways. But a consul general would be selected from the list of men with business experience on the rolls of the Secretary Sherman, when he was a senator, told me he thought no man who did not speak the language of the country in which he was stationed. It is unfortunate that Mr. Sherman did not make that a inviolable rule of his department when he took charge of it.

Mr. Sherman, by the way, was presented to the emperor of France at an official reception when he was in Paris, official reception when he was in Paris, and he wore knee breeches, silk stockings and low shoes for the occasion. This was the costume worn by Embassador Breckinridge at the coronation of the czar. The story about it made much merriment for Mr. Brekinridge's friends and for necessariant inridge's friends and for newspaper readers generally in the United States. Knee breeches are worn by many of our diplomats on state occasions. Gen.

adier general of the regular army when he is presented to President Faure. But Col. Hay, whose military service was limited to two months. Ambassador White and Ambassador Draper may have to appear in what classic Boston calls "knee pants."

Our representatives abroad once wore not only knee breeches, but swords, But that was in the day when the president of the United States wore knee breeches and observed some of the ceremonies familiar to the courts of Europe. Nowadays our ambassadors prefer uniforms, even militia uniforms, because they are because they are more imposing and usually more becoming. A thin-legged ambassador is not an impressive sight in knickerbockers, and Mr. Sherman, who was always thin, must have presented a remarkable appearance when he made his bow to the president of France. Besides, the uniform is accompanied by a title, and titles are dear to the American heart. Here in Washington they are in some discounts. Washington they are in some disrepute, because the hangers on at the hotels and about the capitol have come to be known as "the majors and the col-onels." But the traveling American likes to be known as of military rank.

And the American ambassador and the American minister are not exempt from the national weakness.

One feature of the passport business, by the way, causes many heart burnby the way, causes many heart burnings. The state department has an absolute rule forbidding the insertion of any title in a passport. The militta officer who wants to be "generaled" abroad and the regular officer of the army the mayor of a city and the army, the mayor of a city and the judge on the bench are on equal terms with the plain citizen in the passport

"Col. John Smith" is John Smith there, and the "Hon. Obadiah Otterson" is plain Obadiah. They protest to the department, but the rule -George Grantham Bain.
