

CIVIL SERVICE CASE

THE STATUS OF DEPUTY REVENUE COLLECTORS BEFORE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

MANY OFFICIALS INVOLVED.

THREE QUESTIONS SUBMITTED BY THE COMMISSION TO THE DEPARTMENT.

VIOLATION OF THE LAW CHARGED

Specific Action Against the Collector at Richmond Who Made a Number of Removals.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The case of the collector of internal revenue at Richmond, Va., whose removal by the deputy collectors, just after his assumption of office, created much interest at the time and against whom charges of violation of the civil service laws were made, is now before Attorney General McKenna for decision on points submitted by the civil service commission as to the status of deputy collectors. The issue is important as involving the status of all deputy internal revenue collectors. The questions submitted by the commission follow:

Are deputy collectors of internal revenue officers of the United States? Does the term of office of such deputy cease by reason of the going out of office of the collector under whom he was appointed and the taking of office by a newly appointed collector? Are they properly in the classified service and subject to the provisions of the civil service act and rules?

The commission, in a brief transmitted to the attorney general, submits that it would certainly appear that a deputy collector is not only an officer under the most approved definitions and under the definitions made by eminent jurists, but the statutes themselves expressly and distinctly recog-upon. Judge Waymire visited Canton on the express invitation of Maj. McKinley, and was then told that if he desired it, and furthermore that if for any reason McKenna's name could not be submitted for the supreme bench Judge Waymire could probably have this place.

The question of synodical superintendent of missions, which has been a "bone of contention," was finally disposed of by the substitution of the office of pastor at large, Rev. T. U. Richmond, of Bathgate, being elected to the position. The Creswell case, which has come up at every session for several years, was finally disposed of. Various charges were being pending against Rev. R. J. Creswell, a prominent member of the synod, and on this occasion a considerable feeling was expressed in the nature of a compromise. Rev. A. C. Manson, of Grand Forks, was elected Sunday school missionary.

Good Soil for Sugar Beets.

SLEEPY EYE, Minn., Oct. 16.—W. F. Kuzne, instructor in chemistry at the state university, has written a series of samples of sugar beets sent from his father's farm, near this place, gave most flattering results. The samples, which are of the Central Minnesota type, which is a 16 percent sucrose. From 10 to 14 percent sucrose is considered sufficiently high for planting. It is suggested that the beets that they were planted late in the season and that the ground was not worked up deep or made very good showing, and amply demonstrate that Brown county soil is fully as well adapted for raising sugar beets as that of any part of the state of Nebraska, where the best sugar industry is very prominent and profitable.

Combine of Flour Mills.

SUPERIOR, Wis., Oct. 16.—The combination of flour mills at the head of the lake, which has been the subject of much discussion, with considerable prospect of going through. The merger of Duluth, the Daily Lake, Minnesota, Commander and Grand Rapids of this city, are mentioned as favoring it, but it is said the Freeman hotel, which is the only opposition to success. The E. P. Mills company of Milwaukee is large stockholder and creditor of the Superior mills and is the main mover in getting them under one management.

Threw Away Physic

Then Dr. Still Started a New School of Healers. Kansas has been held responsible for all sorts of queer ideas and strange things generally, and now it confesses to giving the West a new style of healer, like the late Schliatter, but a system of healing which may be acquired, and therefore which does not die out when the chief apostle is locked up or disappears. "Osteopathy" is the name given to the new healing system. It is a word which you will not find in the dictionary, but Kansas people are not trammelled by orthographic limitations. The osteopaths of the West, for they have gone forth from Kansas to several other states, are locally and commonly known as bone setters or bone doctors. They are heard of from time to time in various localities and always as doing a rushing business. They are not as yet numerous enough to be generally known, but the time is not far distant when they will be, for there is an institution in a little Missouri town which is turning out osteopaths at the rate of half a hundred a year. The originator of this new medical fad is Dr. Andrew T. Still, formerly of Kansas, but now of Kirksville, Mo. Dr. Still is a unique and interesting character. He is a Virginian by birth and a physician by the same token— that is, his father was a doctor. So were his three uncles, so are his three brothers, and so are his three sons, as well as his wife and one daughter. The Stills are healers, you see, from way back. Dr. Still served during the war as an army surgeon, and afterward set to work to the practice of his profession in Lawrence, Kan. At that time he was an alopath of the old school. In 1874, so the story of the birth of osteopathy runs, four of Dr. Still's children were simultaneously stricken with spinal meningitis, and in spite of all skill and medicine they died. The old alopathic kind they died. Then and there Dr. Still decided that there was something radically wrong with alopathy. So he gave up his practice, moved over to Kirksville, Mo., and began to study along new lines. All other interests were dropped in order that he might pursue his investigations. His family was supported by his eldest son, who worked in a grocery store. Little by little he worked out the theory of osteopathy and gradually put it into practice. His first success was the curing of a bad case of asthma, and for two years he traveled about hunting up asthma patients to practice on. At last he reduced his theory to what he thinks is a science and since then he has been busy and prosperous. His theory is that the body, to be in a state of perfect health, must be in direct freely through the veins and arteries. Disease arises simply from the fact that something has stopped the free circulation of the blood through some of these channels or has cut off the location of these blocked channels and how to remove the obstruction is to know how to cure the ill. His method of renewing the free circulation of the life fluid is by manipulating the flesh and bones in such a manner that the blood is forced through its natural passages. He uses an arm or a leg or the hand, or the fingers of a pump and the diseased, clogged channels are flushed clean. This he calls the natural method. Physicians of the old school, Dr. Still says, attempt to produce the same effects by the use of drugs which not only have a reactionary effect, but often entirely fail to act. Dr. Still uses no drugs at all. His sons conduct his business on the same principles. Having elaborated his science and built up a bigger practice than he could handle alone, Dr. Still began to call upon the different members of his family to help him. By this time his name had spread through Missouri, and in 1892 he began to think of starting a school for the teaching of osteopathy. After much opposition he secured a charter from the Missouri state legislature to found a school of osteopathy. In 1894 he began to build a brick building which in itself is an evidence that scientific bone setting must be profitable, if nothing more. He has always been a man of peculiarities. He has the stern manner of a doctor of the old school, but is said to have a most benevolent nature. He refuses to do any kind of advertising, and his maximum charges are said to be $25 a month for treatment. Hundreds of his patients pay nothing at all. His sons conduct their business on the same principles. But for all this osteopathy has a hard row to hoe. The medical profession is most jealous of its rights and prerogatives, and its orthodox members do not look kindly on innovations of any sort. They have been particularly active in making it unpleasant for the bone doctors. In several instances they have caused the arrest of the osteopaths on the charge of practicing without a license. The defense of the osteopaths is always that they do not practice medicine but merely manipulative healing. After a long and hard fight in each state they have finally secured the passage of laws allowing them to pracnize a deputy collector as a United States officer. As to the second question it is argued that the deputy holds over until his successor is duly appointed and that an affirmative act, not only on the part of the collector, but of the commissioner of the internal revenue is a sine qua non in vacating an office of a duly appointed deputy.

PENSION RULING.

Former Practice Reversed by the Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—In the case of John Kelly, of the Forty-first Pennsylvania Emergency Battalion, and the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Assistant Secretary of Interior Davis has laid low the ruling that, as the soldier's two terms of service aggregated more than ninety days, the rejection of his claim under the act of June 27, 1896, was error. This reverses the former practice, which required the ninety days service of a soldier to have been continuous.

Tapachula, the port to which the government dispatches that the revolutionary forces had been driven, is just across the border. As soon as the right moment arrives to strike the blow, the Klondike revolutionaries are to be in concert and engage the divided forces of Barrios simultaneously.

TOO QUIET FOR HER.

Mrs. Scoville Found the Life in Alaska Monotonous.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., Oct. 16.—The steamer Alki arrived here at noon from Alaska after an unusually rough voyage. Capt. Patterson reports rough weather during the past year. The Alki brought down twenty-two first-class passengers and sixty second-class, including twenty-eight Chinese from the cannery at Pyramid Harbor. One of the passengers was Mrs. Sylvester Scoville, wife of the well-known newspaper correspondent. Mrs. Scoville said: "I left Lake Bennett ten days ago and reached the town of Skagway ten days ago. The weather was very rough, and the actual traveling time, at Lake Bennett there had been a strong wind blowing from the west, and the ice was very rough for a week. No one has attempted to start across the lake during that time. I have before I left the lake the wind shifted around to the south, and a dozen boats started at once."

"Great grief is caused at Lake Bennett owing to the fact that the sawmill there can only cut enough lumber in a day to build two boats. Skagway had during two months there from a town of tents to a substantially built town, there being fully 500 houses well built and shingle roofed. While I had good health there during my two months stay, I wish to say in a burst of confidence that I never want to see such a miserable country again. All the reports about bold, bad men fighting and shooting are false. Why, it is so quiet there as to be really monotonous."

DECISION FOR THE N. P.

Federal Judge Finds Against Merchants of Spokane

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 16.—United States District Judge Handford today rendered a decision in the case of the Merchants of Spokane vs. Spokane, against the Northern Pacific company. The Spokane merchants had sought to compel the railroad company to give them the same rate from points on the Atlantic coast to Seattle as the rate from the coast terminals. Judge Handford held that this was not to be just, owing to the character of the order.
