SAINT PAUL. RUSH'S GRAND RUSH

LOCAL NEWS NOTES.

Liberty Lodge, Knights of Pythias, is about to consolidate with St. Paul Lodge No. 42.

Stand firm in your demands for what you ask for in a store. Something "as good" is usually far worse. Take no substitutes and you will get the worth of your money.

The funeral of little Eleanor Good Forbes, daughter of County Surveyor Forbes, of Dakota county, who died yesterday morning at the home of her grandfather, in this city, will be held at Mendota today at 9 a. m.

Stick to what you see advertised in the newspaper when you get to the store. Don't get a wily salesman throw you off the track. You know what you want better than he does.

Another Ex-Cop Pinned. Patrick McDonough, the ex-special policeman who has been frequently before the police court, was locked up yesterday by Officer Pat Smith, on the charge of assault and battery.

McDonough and John Miesan engaged in a fight on the flats yesterday afternoon, during which the latter was severely punned. McDonough will be arraigned before Judge Twoby today.

And After a Lively Chase He Was Captured and Locked Up at Duces.

There was a lively chase after a suspicious character in West St. Paul yesterday afternoon, participated in by both citizens and police, afoot and horseback. After an exciting pursuit of over a mile, through railroad yards and cross streets, the fugitive was captured by Detective McKinley in a shed in the rear of 230 East Congress street, where he had hidden when closely pressed.

At the Duces street station the prisoner gave the name of Peter Rush and was locked up on the charge of vagrancy. In his possession were found fourteen watch chains, thought to have been stolen.

It was while attempting to dispose of the jewelry on Fairfield avenue that the attention of the police was called to Rush and his suspicious actions. Officer Lauderdale started after the man, who immediately took to his heels. Rush established an unqualified right to the name he bears and led the policeman a long chase through the Kansas City railroad yards, emerging onto Robert street, where Officer Zimmerman joined in the pursuit. After a run of several blocks, however, Officer Zimmerman became sick and was obliged to stop occasionally to relieve his oppressed stomach. Rush was slowly gaining on his pursuers, when a son of Officer Squires, of the central detail, who was out horseback riding, took a hand in the chase. Galloping after Rush he finally came up with him, when the fugitive asked the lad to take him on his horse. Rush did not seem to know that he was placing himself at the mercy of an embryonic sleuth when the boy told him to climb on the horse's back, and endeavored to make the mount. Each time, however, that he attempted to jump upon the animal's back, the boy caused the horse to jump and prance about so that the feat became impossible. In the meantime the distanced policemen were hearing the scene. Officer Zimmerman, in crossing a vacant lot, had found a big gray horse tethered, and without asking any one's permission jumped astride the animal and rode after Rush with the abandon and grace of a Comanche chief on the war path. Officer Lauderdale was at a big disadvantage with his fellow bluecoat tearing up the street on his fiery steed, but, reinforced by Detective McKinley, kept up the chase.

When Rush saw Officer Zimmerman and the big gray swing onto Congress street, the policeman no longer handicapped by a rebellious stomach, he gave up trying to mount behind young Squires and again took to his heels. But Officer Zimmerman let go a war whoop which nearly frightened his mount to death and caused the animal to jump ahead with greater speed. Rush heard the clattering hoofs close behind him and dived into an alley back of the Norton home. He hid in the shed, and, by the time Officer Zimmerman had gotten his charger stopped and turned around, Detective McKinley had arrived and dislodged the prisoner from the rafters where he had sought safety.

Rush, it was afterward learned, had sold three watch chains for small amounts. He claims to come from Chicago.

BARON ARPAD HUNTS

PAINTER OF COUNTESS ZICHY'S PORTRAIT, A LA TRILBY, GOES WEST.

WILL SHOOT AT LARGE GAME.

BEING TIRED OF DODGING BULLET OF A JEALOUS COUNT.

WHERE IS THE PAINTING?

Rumor Has It That the Canvas Is Within the Limits of This Holy City.

If the Count Hermann Zichy is still running for the Baron Arpad Paszthory, he will find the last mentioned nobleman in the wilds of the far West any time for the next month or so.

The baron was in St. Paul yesterday with his cousin, M. de Bussiere-Muller, and went on his way to Jackson's lake, on the Northern Pacific coast train, in the afternoon.

The cousin with the bifurcated mustache still in St. Paul, a guest at the Hotel Metropolitan.

Who is the Baron Arpad Paszthory? Why is he the painter whose good looks and skill with the brush induced the Countess Zichy to pose for him for a picture that astonished the art critics and ripped the aristocracy of Austria-Hungary in twain, because the Count Zichy recognized in the face of the beautiful work of art the lineaments of the wife of his bosom.

The scandal that resulted from the discovery of the identity of the face took on international interest when, quite recently, during a reception given by the Baron de Mendonca, the Brazilian minister to the United States, it was found that a painting by Paszthory, owned by De Mendonca and entitled "The Nymph at the Pool," was also a portrait of Countess Zichy. On account of the original discovery, Baron Paszthory expatriated himself, the husband of Hans Carls, the destroying of the picture, and the painter insisting that he would neither sell nor destroy the work—which was really of such rare beauty as to raise the painter to the very forefront of his profession.

Baron Paszthory was spoken to about the picture yesterday, and was not at all loath to discuss it, but his English was very difficult, and his cousin, M. de Bussiere-Muller, did the discussing.

While traveling with his cousin and making his exile tolerable, but his affection for the exile does not go far enough to cause him to go after big game and possibly blow his head off.

He stays in St. Paul pending the return of the baron.

According to M. de Bussiere-Muller the Counts of Paszthory lorded it over the Hans Carls in the city yesterday.

The family name of the Paszthorys happened to be Carls, a sign that the Carls of Dalton trail, decided that discretion was the better part of valor and returned to civilization. He will go in again next spring and is on his way East to spend the winter with his family at Harrisburg, Pa. There is not the least doubt, Mr. Morley says, but that there will be untold suffering among those who have gone into the gold country light as to provisions.

A company, he stated, was being formed in Seattle, backed by the Rothschilds, which would take 450 head of stock and make an effort to reach the miners by Jan. 1. The party would make headquarters at Selkirk on the Yukon. A person going into the gold district, Mr. Morley advised, should go prepared to remain at least two years and carry provisions to last at least half of that time.

Mr. Livmore, who represents the chamber of commerce of Seattle, and is advancing the interest of that city in his travels, claims that the city is booming. Buildings, which six months ago were unoccupied and could not be rented, are now filled and the upper part of office buildings are being turned into hotels. Firms engaged in preparing plans for the people going into the Klondike are rushed with business, one firm having 1,000 orders ahead. The gold excitement, according to Mr. Livmore, has been a great thing for Seattle, and new business blocks are being erected to accommodate the demand.

George Haack, of Bottineau, N. D., is at the Merchants.

W. W. Newcomer, of New York, registered at the Metropolitan.

Was Driving Recklessly. Charles W. Wright, a resident of Minneapolis, was arrested by Officer Twoby, of the Prior avenue station, yesterday afternoon, on the charge of reckless driving. It is alleged that he was driving a motor car at a speed of 40 miles an hour, and was in the act of passing a horse-drawn carriage when he was struck by a pedicab.

Thieves Now Steal Aquariums and the Like. An unused aquarium, which was stored by the owner in the rear of 133 East Third street, was carried off by thieves Saturday night. The property was a large cumbersome affair, which must have necessitated the efforts of several men in being removed. When the owner discovered his loss yesterday, he remarked that the next thing would probably be thieves carrying off his store.

President Winter Home. Ex-President E. W. Winter, of the Northern Pacific railroad, returned yesterday from his Western trip.
