TELL THEIR STORIES

Swearing, she thought, would not really have kept the girls awake. The black horse which appeared was from the closing of a dark hallway.

Plaintiff Continues Her Testimony Under Re-Direct Examination. Three Girls on Witness Stand.

Dr. Abbott, the Physician of the Institution, Put on for the Defense. Selina Clewett, the plaintiff in the celebrated suit against the House of the Good Shepherd, resumed the stand yesterday forenoon in Judge Brill's court room.

On the opening of court, Mr. Butts proceeded with his re-direct examination of Miss Clewett. In response to her counsel's questions, the plaintiff continued her story.

On one occasion her cousin had come to pay her a visit. A sister always on such occasions sat near within hearing distance, concealed behind a curtain. The sister heard all that passed.

They watched her just as close as they could. She had seen them strike others. She had been afraid to go to the mother superior without permission. Her superior would have been insulted. She would have gone down on her knees and kiss the floor.

To Gen. Clapp, counsel for the defendant, witness said, and she had asked to go into the Magdalene class when she was there a year because she was a mother superior to join the Magdalenes. The Magdalenes came to the laundry only to do their own washing. They had a separate room.

Mr. Butts—When they join the Magdalenes, the black girls were there for life, and she thought they wanted her to join that class so that she would be there for life.

Witness was questioned closely about joining the Magdalene class, and it did not appear from her testimony that she had asked to join that class.

Then came Katie Connolly. She was born in Ireland, and was twenty years old when she came to St. Paul. She was a mother superior, and she had a very young mother and father.

It seemed that she had been an inmate on two occasions. The first time she was referred to her first residence there as the "olden times."

The laundry had been cold in the olden times, but had been warm. They had had a girl named Mary. She was a mother superior, and she had a very young mother and father.

Mr. O'Brien's original motion was that the chair appoint a committee of seven to formulate a constitution and by-laws for the government of the proposed Central Democratic club.

CHARTER COMMISSION DISCUSSES THE ADVISABILITY OF MAKING IT FOUR YEARS. SOME THINK IT IS TOO LONG.

CITIZENS ARE INVITED TO EXPRESS OPINIONS IN WRITING ON IT. BEGINNING AT THE BEGINNING.

The Commission Makes Some Amendments on the Present Charter's First Chapter.

The charter commission held its fourth meeting at the council chamber last evening, with eleven of the fifteen members present. J. J. Parker made his first appearance, the other ten present being President Horn and Messrs. Clark, McNair, Alness, Murray, Lusk, Lindeke, Innis, Kreiger and Lightner.

The secretary read the first thirty-eight consecutive sections of the present compilation of the charter, and an informal discussion, covering nearly all the subjects mentioned in the sections, resulted. Subcommittees were appointed to redraft and eliminate a lot of verbiage from the sections read and ordered to report at the next meeting of the commission.

As soon as the members were called to order and the minutes of the last meeting approved, Mr. McNair moved that the secretary proceed and read the revised chapters of the present charter, and if any changes were thought necessary by the commission, the matter could be discussed at the time.

Mr. Clark seconded the motion, and Secretary Innis commenced on the first section of the first chapter of the charter. The chapter relates to the limits of the city and the wards and sections, and is divided into sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38.

Section 4, relating to the time and date of the city elections and the election of aldermen from each ward, brought out a lengthy and wide discussion. Mr. Kreiger suggested that it would be better to have licensed saloons in the territory than to have blind pigs.

Mr. Lusk thought the mayor should be elected for four years. His plan of having one-half the aldermen hold over was for the benefit of the city, as old members had more experience about the city business than new ones.
