"But," you say, "I cannot help this; they are bound to come." Very true, but you can drive them out.

"How?" By using a good, powerful stimulant which will kill them before they have a chance to get their hold on you.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY BLESSED WITH IDEAL WEATHER

Hibernians of the Two Cities Unite in a Demonstration in the Mill City Parade the Most Impressive of the Kind That Has Ever Been Held in the Northwest—The Marchers Banquet.

St. Patrick's day was celebrated with eclat in Minneapolis by the patriotic Hibernians of the two cities, the American descendants yesterday. The observation was general, and assisted by the favorable weather, the celebration throughout was the most successful ever held in this city.

The parade was a most imposing one, and was participated in by 1,000 Minneapolisians. The line formed at the Church of St. Anthony of Padua and marched down Second street to Central avenue, and from there on the river, up Hennepin avenue to Eighth street, and down Nicollet to Third street, and from thence to Harmonia hall, where lunch was served by the ladies' auxiliary of the church.

The paraders made an excellent showing, and marched proudly to martial times. The line was led by a band of 250 men, the most successful ever held in this city. March 17, has in the past been synonymous of muddy weather, but this year a bright sun, not too warm, shone down on dry thoroughfares.

The officials of the parade were N. C. O'Connell, county president of the A. O. U. M., who presided at the banquet, and was ably assisted by Ed. J. Cannon, of St. Paul; Capt. Terrence Conolly, of St. James; Merrick and Ambrose Lennon, of Minneapolis, as division commanders.

An admirable feature of the parade was the plentiful music. Four musical bands accompanied the parade, and spread throughout the line that there was always something to keep step with. The A. O. U. M. band made its debut in the parade, and acquitted itself in fine style. The cadets were under the personal direction of Prof. Heintzman.

A few dozen marchers made much noise in their desperate endeavors to find out something of what was going on inside, but there was nothing to see from the street. The execution was wisely set if that was the object of the sheriff.

After midnight and until the dawn were occupied by those holding cards of admission, the stairways leading from the ground floor of the court house to the tower room, in which the execution took place, were crowded with those who had received permits to witness the event.

When the doors leading into the room in which the gallows stood were opened, there was a rush to gain an entrance, and considerable levity was indulged in.

John Lemke, with Jailer Duffield and Rev. J. A. Jaski, supporting him on either side, and accompanied by four deputies entered.

Here Moshik seemed to lose nerve and it appeared as if the jailer and the priest were helping the man along, but once on the scaffold he held to his position and held it to the finish.

Placed in the Casket. The casket in which Moshik will be interred was taken to the basement of the court room during the evening, and after the physicians had announced the body lifeless, it was placed in the casket and removed to O'Reilly & Long's undertaking establishment.

No autopsy will be taken, as the relatives of the executed man positively forbid any such proceeding.

WAS HANGED BY THE NECK

deal, but he ate slowly and occasionally lapsed into a state of stupid somnolence, from which he would start with a jump and begin eating again.

Moshik was in his shirt sleeves most of the time. He was smoking, and seemed more really concerned when ashes from his cigar fell on his white shirt sleeves than anything else.

People who had spent his last days with Moshik predicted that he would break down at the end, and would have to be carried to the gallows. The break-down was imminent when the time came for saying good by to his sisters.

Mrs. Wenzel had promised that she would stay with him to the last, but the sheriff and Moshik's advisers tried to get him to release her from this promise, and he did so.

Even after this scene, attendant on this last good by, the sisters would not leave the building. He might ask for them again.

Moshik had ordered his last supper early in the day. Who his mentor was is not clear, but he certainly never knew what lobster was until yesterday, and that was a part of his bill of fare.

Physicians who have examined Moshik have claimed that he suffered from a case of insanity. Testimony was introduced to prove that Moshik was insane in the family and other physicians were called to the stand to show that the prisoner's father and long previous friends were sane.

How the Gallows Were Constructed and How Operated. The preparations for the hanging of Moshik was the first act of the kind delivered to the merits of Sheriff Phillips. He did not take kindly to the task, but as a duty, he went to it quietly, and brought it to its conclusion.

When the doors leading into the room in which the gallows stood were opened, there was a rush to gain an entrance, and considerable levity was indulged in.

Why Moshik Killed Lemke. Moshik was a young, tall, powerful fellow. He was six feet three inches in height, and weighed 175 pounds.

Claimed He Thought That His Victim Was a Stool Pigeon. Moshik was a young, tall, powerful fellow. He was six feet three inches in height, and weighed 175 pounds.
