Seek a Murderer

Continued from First Page. in a foot or so of Middleton, for an examination of the body shows that the left forearm, the wrist to the elbow is powder-burned and the flesh is charred.

George Lamb, employed at the Burlington freight depot, who occupies a room on the first floor of 267 1/2 West Seventh street, informed the police yesterday that he heard loud talking in the store as though persons were quarreling.

After the shooting he heard sounds as if persons were running in the store, and a moment after the cries made by Middleton.

Mrs. Schroer, occupying apartments over Rollins' drug store, at Seventh and Sherman streets, told the detectives she heard a woman scream, and shortly afterward she came into the block which she lives and aroused Dr. Wells, saying that a man had been shot.

As soon as she heard of the shooting Mrs. Schroer recalled that while passing the store occupied by Middleton, about 11 o'clock, she noticed a woman, accompanied by two girls, standing in the doorway of the store.

The woman was of slight build, and the girls about six and seven years old. Ten minutes later when she returned to the store going to get her apartments she noticed the woman and children. The girl, she said, appeared to be waiting for someone.

E. B. Rollins, the druggist at Sherman and West Seventh streets, heard but one shot fired and flexes the time at 1:15 o'clock.

When he heard the shot, and slipping in part of his clothing, ran to the scene. Middleton was found sitting on the step in front of the store with his arms outstretched.

Mrs. E. H. Bragg, whose husband runs a laundry at 267 West Seventh street, and lives directly across the street, was awakened by the sound of three shots. She and her husband ran to the window, and saw Middleton crawling out of the door to his store.

He was only partly dressed and cried for assistance. Neither Mrs. Bragg nor her husband saw anyone on the street except Middleton.

IN MIDDLETON'S EFFECTS. Among the effects found in a trunk in the store was a bag containing about $10 in pennies and a child's bank with a small amount of money in it.

The police found in the pockets of Middleton's trousers a Mexican dollar and Columbian fifty-cent piece.

A letter from the Second National bank, under date of Aug. 25, was found on a table in the bedroom, notifying Middleton to call and pay a note for $100, which was overdue, or legal proceedings would be commenced against him.

Middleton was conducting a commission business and had several agents on the road selling goods for him. Letters from one of his salesmen in North Dakota, under date of Sept. 3, requested that he forward at once $15, or if not possible, to send him $25, and the proceeds were to be used for the business.

All the letters and the appearance of the store and stock the police claims, indicate that burglars would not pick out a store for its place of business to secure a valuable haul.

Letters from Milwaukee, signed "May," found among Middleton's effects, bring out the fact that his two sons are living with a woman and her sister, and that his wife died four years ago. Middleton's parents live at Milwaukee, but he informed the police that he had never seen his father since he was a child.

COULDN'T FIND THE BULLET. The body of the murdered man was removed to the morgue yesterday afternoon and an autopsy held by Coroner Selous. The physician who examined the bullet struck the large artery leading to the heart, but the surgeons could not find the missile which caused Middleton's death.

An inquest will be commenced this afternoon at the county morgue, at 1 o'clock. If the body is not claimed by the relatives it will be buried at the expense of the county.

Middleton was thirty-eight years of age, and was formerly a "news butcher" on one of the Chicago lines. He has been in the city for some time, and his business at the place where he was shot, for the past seven months, and previous to that time was engaged in the same line at 95 West Seventh street.
