

BOYS AT CAMP MEADE

ARE ABOUT TO START FOR THE NEW LOCATION IN THE SOUTH

WINTER WORK IS IN DOUBT

But the Men Are in Good Shape For Anything Either Fighting or Garrison Duty—Some of the Sick Left Behind Are Joining the Regiment—Promotions and Reductions.

Special Correspondence The St. Paul Globe. CAMP MEADE, Pa., Nov. 4, 1893.—The movement of troops from Camp Meade to Southern camps has already begun. The engineers and several battalions of state troops have been sent to place the camp in readiness for the balance who will soon follow. Just when the Fifteenth Minnesota will go has not yet been decided, but they will undoubtedly leave early next week. It is the intention of the government to have Camp Meade entirely cleaned up and deserted by Nov. 20, at the latest. Major and pay roll were signed on Monday, it being the intention to pay all the troops before leaving. We expect to be paid on Friday or Saturday at the latest.

Although a model camp in many respects but few of the boys will regret leaving here. Furloughs of from seven to ten days have been granted to nearly all who asked for them, and to those not caring to avail themselves of this privilege plenty of liberty has been given to visit the points of interest within the immediate neighborhood. Excursions at cheap rates have been run on Sundays to Gettysburg, Washington and Baltimore, and but few of the boys can say they did not see at least one of these places of national interest.

Within about three miles of the camp is the second largest cave in the United States, the Giant's. It is visited daily by hundreds who by the aid of torch and candle explore its gloomy depths for miles.

The forests of hickory, chestnut and oak which cover the mountains in all directions have but just taken on their beautiful fall colors of brown, purple, red and gold, and they present a glorious panorama of beauty of which the eye never weary.

From a hill top about one-fourth of a mile in rear of our camp may be seen the Susquehanna, a broad, swift, and shallow stream, the course of which may be followed for miles. On its western side rise the gentle slopes of the Cumberland mountains. These mountains are one continuous ridge, broken here and there by an elevation slightly higher than the balance of the ridge, but none of which could hardly be called a peak. Between the camp and the river runs the Pennsylvania railroad, over which pass hundreds of trains daily. In plain sight from the hills are the villages of Middletown, Highspica and Steelton.

It is well for the army that it has been located in healthful, peaceful scenes like these presented here. It has given the leaders a chance to become acquainted with the different regiments, and the men a chance to become acquainted with their leaders. It has been a breathing spell in which the regiments have been allowed to regenerate their strength by the return of sick ones left behind at other camps. It has developed "esprit de corps," and has shown that in the rawest and greenest men to be made soldiers. It has changed a mob of recruits into a splendidly equipped and disciplined soldiery ready for whatever duty they may be called on to perform. If the fifteenth comes to Cuba to do garrison duty this winter, if they are called on to face a foreign foe, or if they simply remain in some Southern camp to be in readiness when wanted, the government will find them ready.

CAMP CHAT. Col. Leonauser has left for a short furlough and the regiment is now under the temporary command of Lieut. Col. Gozian. Capt. Leonard has been detached to his company and placed on the staff of Maj. Gen. Young, and Lieut. Connors has been assigned the command of the First division hospital.

Lieut. Ferguson has been placed in charge of the regimental commissary, this partially relieving Quartermaster Cook of some of the duties he has had to perform. Quartermaster Stevens' commissary has been tried by court-martial and reduced to the rank of a private for absenting himself from his company for several days. He left his company when at Philadelphia, at the time of the peace jubilee.

August Anderson, who was one of the boys taken down with typhoid at Camp Ramsey, and but just returned to the hospital, this time for the purpose of having a tumor cut from his neck.

Corporal Nelson J. Perron, who was left behind at Camp Chat, has been given a furlough of thirty days to visit his friends at Foston, Minn. He has been honorably reported that Corporal Perron had been in the hospital.

The regimental canteen, or store, although not handling beer, as so many of the canteens here, is a very successful one, which will be divided among the different companies for the purpose of buying table liquors, not including the army ration.

Corporal Gallou, who has the canteen in charge, is a very successful one.

CASE HANGING

NO DEVELOPMENTS IN THE MIDDLETON MURDER CASE REPORTED YESTERDAY

EDMONDS STILL AT LARGE

Kauth Doesn't Like the Way the Detectives Have Used Him, and Has Refused to Give the Police Any Additional Pointers—Sticks to the Statement Which He Originally Gave to the Globe.

Having followed the advice of Nicholas Kauth, the young man under arrest for having aided the detectives in unraveling the Middleton murder mystery, Detective Campbell and his private agency assistants are now carefully guarding the suspect, William Kennedy, or August Pedorf, at an uptown hotel, and awaiting expectantly for Kauth to tell them what to do next. The detective would like to capture "Slo" Edmonds, whom Kauth says Pedorf said was his companion in the robbery of Middleton's store, and who actually did the shooting. Kauth does not like the way the detectives have used him and has refused to further advise them what to do, consequently the case is at a standstill.

When the detectives get tired of living at the hotel with Pedorf they may take him to the police station to be confined as an other prisoner. This would remove the "mystery" of the arrest, however.

At the central station Kauth is kept in a cell, but the news of his capture, paper men and policemen. To all with whom he talks he tells the same story.

CRUSHED IN A WRECK FIREMAN JOSEPH ROCKSTRAH DIES FROM INJURIES IN A TRAIN ACCIDENT

ENGINEER CLARK SCALDED The Former Died While Being Brought to St. Paul, but the Latter Will Recover—A Mishap That Was Caused by the Derailing of a Train Between Hayfield and Austin.

A special train pulled into the depot at 6 o'clock last evening, having on board W. H. Clark, an engineer in the employ of the Chicago Great Western Railroad company, who was injured in a wreck near Red Rock yesterday morning, and the dead body of Fireman Joseph Rockstrah, who died from injuries received in the wreck before reaching this city. Engineer Clark was severely scalded about the face and hands. He was taken to Bethesda hospital, where he was attended by Dr. Steve, physician for the Chicago Great Western road. Clark's injuries are not dangerous. Rockstrah's body was taken to the morgue by a local undertaker.

The derailed train was the passenger train that runs between Austin and Hayfield. The train was northbound, and was derailed by the engine of Red Rock. The engine followed, bumping over the ties. The engine tipped over, pinning the fireman, who was killed. Rockstrah in the wrecked cab. Escaping steam from the boiler scalded both the engineer and fireman before they could be rescued. Rockstrah was caught in the more dangerous position and was badly scalded about the head and upper part of the body.

Conductor Crabtree was the only other person on the train, and he was only badly shaken up. Rockstrah was a wife of Red Rock, and he was only badly shaken up. Rockstrah was a wife of Red Rock, and he was only badly shaken up.

When the news of the accident reached the company officials a special train was sent out for the engineer and conductor to the scene of the wreck. The injured fireman and engineer were put under the care of two physicians on the train, and all speed made to get them to a hospital in this city. Rockstrah's injuries proved fatal, however, and he died on the trip.
