A NOBLE WORK. Aside from the splendid record of practical humane effort revealed by the semi-annual report just published by the Associated Charities of St. Paul, there is much that is gratifying in the absence which is revealed of anything like general want among the poor of the city.

Not a few well disposed persons are disposed to criticize organized charitable effort. The report of Secretary Guthridge has the additional advantage of making plain the great gain to the cause of substantial charity which results from firm, careful and well directed inquiry.

THE SUGAR BOUNTY BILLS. The two bills affecting sugar bounties are making progress in a manner very satisfactory to the owners of the refinery near Minneapolis, and to the sugar trust that is behind them.

"to pass upon the constitutionality of the bill," he said by way of precaution, lest some one might think the question had been submitted to him, and that he was so poor a lawyer as to have upheld the validity of the bill when tested by the constitution.

Before another season, or "campaign," as the sugar folks call the sugar grinding period, some inquiring person, possibly again the state auditor, may ask the attorney general, as he did in the centennial iron tax, if this sugar bounty is a constitutional use of its power by the legislature. And then the whole matter will drop with "a dull thud," just as that tax did.

A GRAND OCCASION. As a musical center St. Paul has long enjoyed a reputation as high as many of the older and larger communities, either East or West. The scene at the opening of the grand opera season here last evening was as strong a demonstration as could be made of the splendid appreciation which distinguishes our people of the higher forms of musical expression.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS. When They Are Good for the Government and When Bad. The great fight against trusts and combinations, more generally made by people who have given the matter only superficial attention, considering only the results, and not the means, is a measure, due to real causes.

QUAY ON TRIAL. The pending trial of Senator Matt S. Quay is an event of national importance. The charge of itself cannot be regarded as of the highest gravity; but if it is maintained it will be effective in putting an end to the public career of Senator Quay.
