Not a Few of the Boys in Blue Found Themselves in the Guard House as a Result of Their Indulgence in Forbidden Pleasures Friday Night—Forty-Fifth Still Recruiting.

Yesterday found the guard house of the Eighth infantry at Fort Snelling well filled with soldiers who made merry the day before and went to the state of the mind to the city of Minneapolis. Friday was pay day, and as the bridge is the only accessible route to St. Paul, and that was well guarded, the only thing left for the men to do was to go to Minneapolis. It is not a difficult matter for the soldiers to get to Minneapolis, but to get to St. Paul is impossible since the new regulations went into effect and a couple of villainous sentries made the west end of the bridge at all hours. Consequently all the money that was spent by the soldiers, with the exception of the few who had passes, went through Minneapolis channels. The Eighth infantry boys had a couple of months' pay coming to them, and as they come here direct from Cuba to spend the winter it was quite natural that they should want to do some shopping without waiting to the state of the mind to the city of Minneapolis.
