GREATEST OF GOLFERS

VIEWS OF HARRY VARDON, THE ENGLISH EXPERT, NOW IN THIS COUNTRY DOES NOT FOLLOW THE BOOK

The Style of Play His Own and Successful in Spite of the Fact That It Differs Very Materially From the Rules Laid Down—Set of Thirteen Clubs Used by the Virtual Champion of the World.

Harry Vardon, open champion of Great Britain and the most famous golfer of the age, who arrived at New York a week ago, is a man of about thirty years of age, five feet 10 or 11 inches in height, and weighs 155 pounds.

Vardon, when asked his mode of training, laughed heartily, for though virtually champion of the world, he is a man who does not believe in training further than to eat, drink, smoke and stay up late at night the same as any other man.

He has often remained up half the night, smoking, drinking and chatting with friends during his most important matches, during a championship when thirty-six holes had to be played each day.

In speaking of the game, Vardon said he had violated all the instructions given in the books regarding the proper way to play golf, and Taylor has done likewise, as both play alike.

"We were the first to introduce the overlapped grip in which the little finger of the right hand rests on the first joint of the index finger of the left hand.

"The advantage of this grip is to make the two hands work as one and not have the right hand try to get its work in over the left, which causes sliding and pulling. We were also the first to introduce the short handed clubs, which give one far more control over the direction of the ball, while one can get fully as much distance with the longer shafts.

Success has caused nearly all the golfers in England to copy after our style of playing. CLUBS CUT OFF.

"The old school of shafts are made long and the golfers are taught to grip lower down on the shaft and allow two or three inches of the club to protrude beyond the left hand. This, I argue, is an absolute waste and I have shortened the shafts so that my left hand sets flush with the end of the club.

"The fact is, the grip of the club is precisely the same, only I have cut off the two or three inches protruding club. The difference is little, but the average golfer merely sees that the club is shorter and imagines that a revelation has taken place, for, instead of taking his usual grip, which would grip him back to the end of the club, he gets himself out of plumb by trying to grip the shortened club and still leave from two to three inches protruding.

"My object is to go away with the carrying of useless wood, which I accomplish by shortening the club, and at the same time get a better command of the ball.

"Another old-time theory which we ignore, I mean Taylor and myself, is the practice of holding the left fingers firmly and the right loosely, as it only tends to wildness in direction. I believe in a firm grip at all times.

"By the overlapping grip I have already mentioned there is no identity of either the right or left hand, and the two act as one. In gripping the left thumb is straight down the shaft under the right palm, and the right thumb nearly as gripped in the ordinary way. I might grip ten yards or so in distance, but the ball more than likely would be sliced or pulled all over the course, as I have proven this point to my satisfaction in practice, when I often try the results of such experiments. In playing a match, however, I give my undivided attention to the task I have to perform.

BOX OF CLUBS. Vardon opened his box of clubs. There were thirteen in the set; two drivers, one brassie, two driving mashes, two cleeks, one a special club of his own with a somewhat deep face, like that on the driving mashie; two lofters, two putters, and a mashie and a niblick. One putter was a goose-neck, the other an ordinary putting cleek. Vardon uses the putting cleek for approach puts. One lofted and the niblick had corrugated faces.

Looking proudly at his clubs, Vardon said: "There is a shaft in that driver which I bought in 1875, and it has lasted for ten years, and no matter what kind of a head I put on it, I can play with it just the same."

It was remarked that his irons were of no special brand, but, like a job lot, were of many different makes. Vardon smiled pleasantly, in a quiet, unassuming manner, as he replied that the ten iron clubs were the pick of over 600 hundred clubs which he had thoroughly tested.

AT REST IN CALVARY

Private Schwartz, of Thirteenth Minnesota, Buried Yesterday. The funeral of Private Charles Schwartz, a member of Company H, Thirteenth Minnesota volunteers, who died at Manila Aug. 13, 1898, from epidemic fever, took place yesterday afternoon from St. Agnes' Catholic church, Kent and Thomas streets.

The body of the soldier was buried with military honors at the city cemetery. The church was crowded with sorrowing friends of the young soldier, and many floral tributes were banked about the casket. The service was conducted by Rev. Father St. John.

AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE church service the casket was again placed on the caisson and escorted by the military guard to the city cemetery. Here a last salute was fired as the body was lowered into the grave.

TOOK TWO TO GET HIM

Passenger on a Late Interurban Accused of Making Trouble. Considerable excitement prevailed aboard an interurban car at Rice street and University late Saturday evening. A passenger wanted to leave the car, and the conductor insisted on having the fare. An argument followed that resulted in the conductor and the passenger having a lively tussle on the rear platform, when Detective Campbell, who was on the car, took a hand in the proceedings.

He placed the passenger under arrest, and then he had a fight on his hands. Detective Campbell managed to get the passenger off the car, and with the assistance of Harry Sinks, formerly connected with the health department, the passenger was finally put in the Rondo station. Where he gave the name of John Mellett. He was charged with disorderly conduct, and will be arraigned in the police court today. The car was in charge of Conductor Mattson.

IN MURDERERS ROW

Grief-Stricken Father the Only Visitor of the Condemned Prisoner. NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Roland B. Molineux, convicted of the murder of Mrs. Thomas J. Hagan, said today by Warden Hagan to have slept as calmly on Saturday night as he did on any other night since his incarceration in the Tombs, beginning nearly a year ago.

The first of his two appeals in the Tombs yesterday night the warden said, did not seem to have in the least affected Mr. Molineux, so far as his outward appearance was concerned. The warden said that Molineux's demeanor is in striking contrast with that of other prisoners who had been in his charge and who had within the last three years been convicted of murder in the first degree.

"The warden said that he was surprised to find that Molineux, who was the warden's step child, was the way the warden put it referring to Molineux, after his return to his cell from the court room on Saturday night. Today he arose at the usual hour, took exercise for one hour in the prison yard and the usual breakfast supplied by the prison caterer and read with apparent composure the morning newspaper, after which he attended the usual Sunday services.

The condemned man had but one visitor today. The caller was his grief-stricken father, who has not yet given up hope of a reversal of the higher courts, which will be appealed to, will free his son. Gen. Molineux arrived at the prison about 8:30 o'clock this morning and remained with the prisoner for about half an hour.

During the day Molineux remained in his cell in murderers' row. The Molineux jury spent a quiet Sunday. All of the members of the jury were asked to answer questions as to what had transpired in the jury room, but one of them, desirous of imparting some information regarding some proceedings in the protracted case, made the following statement:

"If I were going to write as a reporter about it I would probably commence by saying the jury was a unit upon the guilt of the defendant. There were some perhaps three of them, however, thought it well to go through the case, discuss the various phases of it and see if the evidence beyond a most reasonable doubt could be fastened in probably an hour at the most, and in order to get to their homes quickly they decided to forego the lunch, and got along on the sandwiches."

"Would you write that there had been much balloting in my presentation, probably a preliminary and a final after the decision?" "Well, I do not think I would have much balloting in my presentation, probably a preliminary and a final after the decision."

"What would you write about the jury coming in and asking to see the exhibits?" "In the remarks of one of the arguments I have already mentioned, the statement was made about a certain thing, whereupon a certain other argumentative jury declared he was a trifle in error."
