ELOQUENT LECTURE DELIVERED BY THE SCHOLARLY DR. HAMILTON MABIE

AUDIENCE WAS FASCINATED Those Who Make Us See Human Nature as It Is and Fire the Page With Life.

High up on some mountain top there starts a tiny limpid stream. Clear as crystal, eddying here and there into deep, still pools; its path forever through green fields, thick woods or untrodden valleys; its journey taking it, perhaps, past here and there a clump of blue violets, a golden poppy, a rare anemone, it indulges in no deep descents, never broadens into anything like a river, but always the tiny stream it blithely travels to the sea.

Those who love good literature must have enjoyed Dr. Hamilton W. Mabie's lecture delivered last night at the People's church. But those who love humanity, who have a sneaking faith in the ideals in spite of the trend of modern thought and who are glad to be, at least, on the road that leads to them, must have taken a deep delight in what the speaker said.

A man of average size, with the face of a scholar—an alive scholar—and a manner that impresses you at once with his gentleness and its strength Dr. Mabie fascinates his audience from the beginning. He neither reads nor gestures, but he talks to his hearers and it seems at first very familiar conversation until you realize that it is very beautiful English, "Literature and its Resources" was the subject of the lecture and under this general head were clustered pen pictures of some American men of letters who have lately died, bits of delightful humor, all the more delightful because it did not pretend to be wit, some wise sifting of the literature that is chaff from the literature that is wheat and a peroration that claimed for the book that would live and the writer that would be immortal a strenuous vitality—soul-voice as it were. The same impression that the mountain stream might make on a weary traveler, Dr. Mabie makes on his hearers and what he says is so sane and his voice, not oratorical, but human, speaks so well his sentiments that what the poet said of the stream one is tempted to say of the speaker, that he goes on indefinitely. Homer, Shakespeare, Goethe, Emerson, they are immortal, said the lecturer, but not so much because of their own greatness, but because they were able to see human nature as it is and to give it its complex life on the written page. Therefore, though the speaker in picturesque phraseology, it seemed easier to fancy Shakespeare going out some dewy morning to pick some of these rare phrases that are the finality of human speech and that grow with other growing things than to think of him putting them down with a prosaic pen on prosaic paper. Morbidity was the alloy that concealed the gold in modern literature. Instead of natural, normal human life we have pictures of morbid dissecting men. A high tribute was paid to Scotland's literature. Rarely has a century passed that this green land has not given some genius that has made its name stand out in the hearts of all nations and nature in return almost thrusts the gift of poetry on her worshippers.

A Silk Sensation of the First Magnitude. The mere announcement of our opening display of New Easter Silks should alone create a sensation among silk buyers.

But the overshadowing event—the crowning event of the Silk business for Spring of 1900 consists of an extraordinary purchase of 3,550 yards of Highest Grade Novelty Silks at an average price of 50 cents on the dollar.

They're superior silks in every respect—choice and handsome patterns and extra good qualities—the equal in every respect of silks now selling in New York at $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50 a yard. The entire lot without any reserve will go on sale at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning at
