Blackmail and Beheading Are the Allurements of Her Secret Societies.

China is absolutely honeycombed with secret societies. The Boxers, who have been making trouble most recently, are only one and a small branch of an organization that is used for every conceivable purpose...

The leader of the "Boxer" party in this vicinity of Wei-hai-Wei is a cabinet-maker named Loh-Shin. Recently two members of a Christian family were captured just outside the walls of Lin-ching in the Ching-ping district, and in order to them a British officer. As the captors would not give them up the local magistrate ransomed them for 200 taels, without asking any questions and in order to them a British officer.

Such, then, was the situation when Col. Dorrance, her majesty's commissioner, arrived on the scene. He acted chiefly for his protection during the progress of the works upon a handful of Chinese troops from another province, who had received their military instruction from British officers.

On their arrival at the place, which was the little village of Hohai, they found a large body of men, numbered not far from 2,000, who were armed in the usual manner. Among them were many ancient matchlocks, spear heads, gas pipes, spades, rakes, old swords, bayonets on poles, etc.

On the train, that night I put in my saloon. I gave the train away so as to get under the tax law. He opened his box with some pride and showed an array of bottles stowed away in the most economic manner.

NO CHANGE OF PROGRAMME.

The tourist had almost reconciled himself to the incongruous idea of a railroad in full operation in far-away Alaska, and had ceased to wonder at the engine leaving a cowcatcher, although there was not a live cow within 1,000 miles; but a train boy was a little too much.

"You can have the two for 75c," said the boy, "but it's giving them to you." The Klondiker gave him $5 with a look which said, "Don't talk about giving me anything," and he read the stale news with much interest, for he was used to paying much more for papers several times as old.

"And what is it, Jimmy?" "It's what they call railroad torpedoes, Sam." "But what's the object of it?" "Well, bust it open with a stone and find out."

"Same old object, Jimmy, the object?" "Same old object, Sam—to keep us movin' on."

Alaska's Train Boy...

How He Is Getting Rich Supplying the Peculiar Wants of the Passengers on the White Pass & Yukon Railroad.

The Klondike Limited, on the furthest north railroad—the White Pass & Yukon—was slowly climbing the short roll of foothills over which the road reaches a mountain bench which is successfully followed across the coast range.

The crowd was cosmopolitan, including an officer of the Northwest mounted police, who had made a hurried trip to Victoria in a fruitless effort to secure permission to go to South Africa; a Klondiker who had forgotten himself in the pleasures of New York and San Francisco until he had to risk life in a sled journey to Dawson; a miniature capitalist, who had his fortune invested in Yukon river steamers and who was going to see to their winter quarters; a woman who was going to spend the winter with her husband at Bennett City; a "leading citizen" of Alaska's only railroad terminal, Skagway; a couple of railroad engineers, and a tourist, very much out of season, but none the less interested in all that went on around him.

"The latest papers, I say, fellows. Boat got in just before we left. Had a run down on the coming papers. Under one arm he carried a bulky bundle of papers. In his disengaged hand was a heavy tin pail filled with general merchandise. On the outside was stenciled in heavy black letters, "Fire, Steamer Humboldt." It was evident that the bucket had been borrowed.

"You can have the two for 75c," said the boy, "but it's giving them to you." The Klondiker gave him $5 with a look which said, "Don't talk about giving me anything," and he read the stale news with much interest, for he was used to paying much more for papers several times as old.

"The only Alaskan train-boy was a boy in vacation only. He was well bundled up for the car in which he made his headquarters was unheated and the zero mark no stranger. Enough of his face showed, however, to enable the tourist to judge his age as twenty years, at least, and his life as a continual round of trouble.

"Sort of surprised you, didn't it, to see this car and tell you all about it. Now, don't any one give me more than they can afford."

enough. They get their money's worth. "Log Cabin is a regular 'tip-top' flower bed in summer, although it don't look like it now. The train stops there for ten minutes and I get off and gather flowers. There are some about a dozen different kinds, and they sell like campaign buttons to the women. Everything favors a train boy in this country, especially when you are the only one for the best in the state, even if they gave me all the profits."

Another Montana Millionaire.

James H. Murray Planning to Give New York a Surprise.

There is a plain little man out in Montana who is planning a big surprise for the people of New York city. He is bound for this town to invest a couple of million of dollars in a theatre. He is a man of excellent taste and fine business judgment, so that there need be no uncertainty as to the style of house he will put up nor as to the financial success of his venture.

The name of this little man is James A. Murray. All Montanians call him "Jim." He is one of a famous trio of millionaires, but he is almost unknown in New York. W. A. Clark and Marcus Daly are the others of the trio, and they are no better known in Montana than "Jim" Murray.

Like other millionaires of the mining camps, Jim Murray began by "scratching gravel." As a boy in Canada he heard wonderful stories of the gold camps of California, and he decided to go to California and try to get rich. An easy way to get rich was to go out to the coast and pick up the gold lying around loose there.

Mr. Murray had laid the foundation for a fortune when Butte began to develop as a mining camp. He also had acquired a reputation as "the most obstinate little man in Pioneer." He couldn't be bluffed and he wouldn't be cheated and he didn't care at anything. Hence he was "set stonite." He went to Butte and with several other prospectors acquired the famous Smoke House claim, Murray putting up the money for improvements and ground stake. The government issued a patent to Murray and his partners. The town began to boom, and the Smoke House claim became the center of operation in the city of Butte.

Mr. Murray's private appearance is not so suggestive of the mining camp. He is a quiet, unassuming man of medium height, fresh complexion, with keen blue eyes and gray hair. He is a well posted man of the world, is fond of horses and of the theatre, and enjoys a game of billiards. He has the finest private library in Montana, and knows more law than many men practicing at the bar.
